1. Introduction

1. This is an application by the Local Authority for a Care Order in respect of two children, Amelia Rose Thornton, born on 3 March 2019, and her brother Oliver James Thornton, born on 21 July 2021. I shall refer to them throughout this judgment as Amelia and Oliver.

2. The children's parents, Mr. Daniel Thornton and Mrs. Sarah Thornton, oppose the making of any order. The children's Guardian ad Litem supports the application.

3. The hearing took place over three days in January 2026. I heard oral evidence from the social worker, the parents, and the Guardian ad Litem. I have read all the documents filed in the case, including the bundle of 412 pages.

4. I am grateful to all counsel for their clear and helpful submissions.

2. The Background

5. Amelia and Oliver live with their parents in a three-bedroom terraced house in Sunshine Meadows. Mr. Thornton is employed as a delivery driver. Mrs. Thornton is employed part-time as a teaching assistant at Sunshine Meadows Primary School, where Amelia is in Reception and Oliver attends the nursery.

6. The family first came to the attention of the Local Authority in October 2024, when a member of staff at the school raised concerns about Amelia's appearance and behaviour. Amelia arrived at school on several occasions wearing clothing that was dirty and unsuitable for the weather. She was also observed to be hungry, asking for food at the start of the morning.

7. A referral was made to the Local Authority's Children's Social Care team on 14 October 2024. An initial assessment was completed within the statutory timescale of 45 working days.

8. The initial assessment identified a number of concerns, including poor school attendance, persistent lateness, and a lack of routine at home. It also noted that Mrs. Thornton had been absent from work for a period of six weeks in the summer of 2025 following a miscarriage.

9. On 12 December 2024, a child protection conference was held. Amelia and Oliver were made the subject of a Child Protection Plan under the category of neglect.

10. The Child Protection Plan was reviewed on 12 March 2025, 11 June 2025, and 9 September 2025. On each occasion it was decided that the plan should continue.

11. On 2 November 2025, the Local Authority issued these proceedings. An Interim Care Order was made on the same day, and the children have remained in the care of their parents under the terms of that order.

3. The Issues

12. The issues for the court to determine are:

    (a) whether the threshold criteria in section 31(2) of the Children Act 1989 are met;

    (b) if they are, what order, if any, is in the children's best interests; and

    (c) whether the plan for the children's future care is proportionate to the risks identified.

13. The parents accept that there have been concerns about the children's care, but they dispute that the threshold is crossed. They say that the difficulties have been overstated and that the family has been receiving appropriate support.

14. The Guardian ad Litem's position is that the threshold is crossed and that a Care Order is necessary to secure the children's welfare.

---

4. The Evidence

15. I heard evidence from the following witnesses:

    (a) Ms. Rebecca Thornton, the allocated social worker;

    (b) Mr. Daniel Thornton, the father;

    (c) Mrs. Sarah Thornton, the mother; and

    (d) Ms. Priya Mehta, the Guardian ad Litem.

16. I also had regard to the written evidence of the school's designated safeguarding lead, Mrs. Helen Carter, and to the health visitor's records.

17. Ms. Thornton gave evidence that she had visited the family home on 18 occasions between October 2024 and November 2025. She described the home as "generally clean but cluttered", and said that she had seen no evidence of physical harm to the children.

18. Mr. Thornton gave evidence that he had struggled to maintain a routine for the children after his wife's miscarriage. He said that he had been working long hours to cover the loss of income and that he had relied on his mother to help with the children's mornings.

19. Mrs. Thornton gave evidence that she had been suffering from depression following the miscarriage and that she had not always had the energy to get the children ready for school. She said that she had since started counselling and that her attendance at work had improved.

20. Ms. Mehta gave evidence that she had spoken to the children on two occasions. She said that Amelia had told her that she sometimes went to school hungry and that she liked her teacher very much.

5. The Law

21. The relevant law is set out in the Children Act 1989, as amended by the Children and Families Act 2014.

22. Section 31(2) provides that a court may make a Care Order or a Supervision Order if it is satisfied that the child is suffering, or is likely to suffer, significant harm, and that the harm is attributable to the care given to the child not being what it would be reasonable to expect a parent to give.

23. "Significant harm" is defined in section 31(9) as ill-treatment or the impairment of health or development. The court must compare the child's health or development with that which could reasonably be expected of a similarly-aged child.

24. The leading authority on the threshold criteria is Re B (A Child) (Care Proceedings: Threshold Criteria) [2013] UKSC 33. The court must look at the circumstances at the time the application was issued, and at the time of the final hearing.

25. In Re S-B (Children) (Care Proceedings: Standard of Proof) [2009] UKSC 17, the Supreme Court held that the standard of proof is the balance of probabilities. There is no intermediate standard.

26. The welfare checklist in section 1(3) of the Children Act 1989 requires the court to have regard to the ascertainable wishes and feelings of the child, their physical, emotional and educational needs, the likely effect of any change in circumstances, their age, sex, background and any characteristics which the court considers relevant, any harm they have suffered or are at risk of suffering, and the capability of each parent to meet their needs.

27. The court must also have regard to the general principle that any delay in determining the question is likely to prejudice the welfare of the child.

28. Section 1(5) provides that the court should not make an order unless it considers that doing so would be better for the child than making no order at all.

29. The court must apply the principles of proportionality and the least interventionist approach. The order must be necessary, and it must be the order that is most likely to promote the child's welfare.

30. In Re B-S (Children) (Adoption Order: Contact) [2013] EWCA Civ 1146, the Court of Appeal emphasised the importance of the court's duty to consider the human rights of all the parties, including the right to respect for family life under Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

31. The court must also have regard to the Public Law Outline, which sets out the timetable for the case and the steps that the parties must take.

6. Analysis

32. I have considered the evidence carefully. I am satisfied that the threshold criteria are met.

33. The children have suffered significant harm in the form of neglect. Amelia's attendance at school has been poor, and she has arrived on many occasions hungry and in clothing that was unsuitable. Oliver's speech and language development has been delayed, and he has missed a number of appointments with the speech and language therapy service.

34. The harm is attributable to the care given to the children not being what it would be reasonable to expect a parent to give. The parents have had the benefit of a Child Protection Plan for nine months, and they have had the support of the school and the health visitor. They have not engaged with that support as they should have done.

35. I accept that Mrs. Thornton's miscarriage was a traumatic event and that it affected her ability to care for the children. I also accept that Mr. Thornton was working long hours. But these explanations do not excuse the harm that the children have suffered.

36. I am satisfied that the parents have the capability to meet the children's needs, but that they have not done so. They have had the opportunity to engage with the support that was offered, and they have not taken it.

37. I have considered whether a Supervision Order would be sufficient. I am not satisfied that it would be. The parents have had the benefit of a Child Protection Plan and they have not engaged with it. I do not consider that they would engage with a Supervision Order.

38. I have considered whether the children should remain with their parents under the terms of a Care Order. I am not satisfied that they should. The risk of further harm is too great.

39. I have considered whether the children should be placed with their maternal grandparents, who live in Bexhill-on-Sea. The grandparents have been assessed and they are willing to care for the children. But the distance from Sunshine Meadows would mean that the children would have to change schools, and I am not satisfied that this is in their best interests at this stage.

40. I have considered whether the children should be placed with foster carers. I am satisfied that this is the most appropriate placement for the children at this stage.

7. Conclusion

41. For the reasons I have given, I am satisfied that the threshold criteria are met and that a Care Order is necessary to secure the children's welfare.

42. I make a Care Order in respect of Amelia Rose Thornton and Oliver James Thornton.

43. I approve the Local Authority's plan for the children's future care, which is that they should remain in foster care with a view to adoption.

44. I make a Placement Order in respect of each child.

45. I make no order for contact at this stage. The parents may apply for contact in the future.

46. I direct that the Local Authority shall file a report for the next hearing by 14 March 2026.

47. I list the case for a review hearing on 28 April 2026.

(1)—"Power to sell," meaning of—Sale under power—Duty of purchaser—Power of attorney—"Purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer."—A power to sell (shares in a public company) is only a power to sell in the ordinary course of business, i.e., for a money price—Per Wilson, J. Where shares in a public company are sold under a power, it is the duty of the purchaser, to see that the price was paid to the owner or his attorney — Per Wilson, J. A joint and several power authorizing the holders "to purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer for the principal and in his name and on his behalf" all his shares in any public company or society, would not justify them to enter into a contract, embodied in bought and sold notes, agreeing to sell and to purchase some time hence at an advanced rate, on their account, certain shares, the bought and sold notes bearing the same date and being one transaction —Per Garth, C.J. It was held that the transaction in this case was either an actual loan, or a transaction in the nature of a loan, for the purpose of raising money — Per Garth, C J. JUMMA DASS v. ECKFORD, 9 C. 1.

(2)—Contract Act, 1872, s. 23—Champerty—Speculative sale.—A speculative sale is not bad on the ground of being against public policy. RAMANUJA AYYANGAR v. NARAYANA AYYANGAR, 18 M. 374. [R., 2 N.L.R. 17.]

(3)—Agreement to sell—Person not in possession—Ejectment suit—Proper remedy.—A certain person alleging himself entitled to possession of certain property from a stranger, and being in want of funds to institute a suit, executed a conveyance to the plaintiff whereby it was agreed that, in consideration of the latter's financing the litigation to be launched jointly by both, the latter should take one-half of the property to be recovered by the intended suit. The vendor, contrary to the terms of the agreement and without the consent of the vendee, compromised with the person against whom the contemplated suit had to be filed, whereby the vendor got some property in quit of all claims. The vendee, thereupon, instituted the present suit for possession of a half share in the whole property under the agreement and for ejectment. Held that the vendor not having been in possession of the property at the date of the agreement, the agreement did not operate as a present transfer of the property, but as an agreement to transfer so much of it as might be recovered by the contemplated suit. The vendee's proper remedy would be a suit for specific performance or for damages for breach of contract, to support which it would have been necessary for the plaintiff to allege a performance of his part of the contract or at least his readiness and willingness to perform and prevention by the wrongful act of the vendor. RANEE BHOBOSOONDREE DASSEE v. ISSUR CHUNDER DUTT, 11 B.L R. 36, P.C.=18 W.R. 140=2 Suther. 616=3 Sar. 136. [F., 21 W.R. 101, 6 B. 380, F.B.; R., 20 W.R. 446. 22 W.R. 535, 23 W.R. 131, 1 C. 297, 2 B. 299, 7 C. 753, 6 B. 645, 10 C. 1037, 9 B. 324, 10 A. 133, 12 A. 234, F.B., 2 O.C. 149, 27 B. 31, 30 C. 265; D., 11 C. 121=11 I.A. 218.]

(4)—"Contract of sale" and" contract to sell," difference between.—A contract of sale is an executed contract and creates a jus in rem, as it passes ownership immediately when it has been executed; and a contract to sell belongs to the class of executory contracts, and is only a jus ad rem for it only creates an obligation attached to the ownership of the property and does not amount to an interest therein. SHIB LAL v. BHAGWAN DAS, 11 A. 244=A.W.N. 1889, 96.

(5)—Sale with condition for cancelment—Condition not fulfilled—Sale rendered absolute.—Where a deed of sale was executed conveying certain property subject to the condition that if the purchase-money were repaid within a certain time together with interest the deed of sale was to be cancelled, on breach of the condition of repayment within the time stipulated the contract executed itself, the transaction was closed and became one of absolute sale and thereafter neither the vendor nor an assignee from him could not sue for redemption. JAGANNATH BRAHMIN v. BALWANTSING, 7 C.P.L.R. 22. [R., 7 C.P.L.R. 101, 8 C.P. L.R. 113, 4 N.L.R. 177; D., 1 N.L.R. 137.]

(6)—Covenant to repurchase in a deed of sale of land—Such covenant is personal and does not run with the land.—A covenant to repurchase in a deed of sale of land is purely personal and does not bind the heirs of the original vendee. GURUNATH BALAJI MUTALIK v. VAMANAVA NALARAO DIVAN, 13 Bom. L.R. 240.

(7)—Sale—Agreement to repurchase executed on same day—Debt—Redemption.—A sale-deed was executed whereby certain property was sold out-and-out. On the same day, an agreement was executed between the parties, whereby the purchaser promised to reconvey the property to the vendor if he paid back the consideration money within a certain time. Money was not paid within the time stipulated, but long after the expiry of that time a suit for redemption was brought. Held that the property was sold out-and-out, and there was no mortgage to be redeemed. A stipulation for repurchase will not of itself convert a sale into a mortgage. To make a mortgage there must be a debt. If there be a right to redeem a property from debt, there must be the correlative right to enforce payment of the debt. GHULAM NABI KHAN v. NIAZ-UN-NISSA, 8 A.L.J. 11=9 Ind. Cas. 140. (12 A. 387, F.; 31 B. 528, R.)

(8)—Contract for sale of goods—Stipulations as to the time of delivery, whether of the essence of contract—Sale of Goods Act, s. 10.—Held, that, unless a different intention appears from the terms of the contract, stipulations as to the time of delivery are not deemed to be of the essence of a contract of sale of goods. THE INSTALMENT BANK, LD., FYZABAD v. LALA KAUDHAYA LAL, 13 O.C. 143=6 Ind. Cas. 1011.

(9)—Right of delivery of goods, whether can be sold—Contract to sell goods C.I.F., at a port named—Incidents attaching to sale by trade usage—Breach of contract of sale—Damages, measure of.—There is no such thing known in law as a sale of a right to delivery. The incidents attaching to a sale C.I.F., by trade usage are these:—On a sale C.I.F., the seller undertakes to ship the goods sold on a vessel bound to the port mentioned, and to deliver the goods on board such vessel by tendering to the buyer a bill of lading for them, together with a policy of insurance covering their insurance to the port to which the goods are to go, and the seller must be ready and able to endorse the bill of lading and to transfer the policy to the buyer, on receiving payment of the price. In case of a breach of contract to deliver the goods, the buyer is entitled to receive from the seller the difference between the contract rate and the rate at the place on the day on which delivery ought to have been made. ABDUL HAMED v. TORAB ALI, 3 L. B.R. 144.

(10)—Sale—Contract to sell—Payment of part consideration—Specific performance—Discretion—Delay—Pleadings—Amendment—Suit on sale—Appeal, second—Prayer for specific performance—Pleadings.—The payment of a part of consideration money does not necessarily imply that there is an out-and-out sale and not a contract to sell. (65 P.R. 1898, R.) Where a suit is based on an alleged completed sale, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to urge in second appeal that the suit may be regarded as one for specific performance of a contract to sell. The latter suit is inconsistent with the position based on an alleged completed sale and cannot be entertained without an amendment of the plaint being allowed. In a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract to sell, where the plaintiff slept over his alleged rights for very nearly twelve years and made no attempt, until a few months of the institution of the suit, to pay to the defendant the balance of the sale price and to get a sale-deed executed and registered in his favour: Held that, under the circumstances, the Court would not be justified in exercising its discretionary power to decree specific performance of the contract. B sued A and C for a declaration that the sale to C was void as against him, and for a direction that A should execute a conveyance in his favour. The lower Courts accordingly passed a decree. In second appeal, it was contended that the proper course is to direct C, and not A to execute a conveyance in B's favour, and that, as there was no prayer in the plaint for such a direction, the suit should be dismissed: Held:—That though the proper course is the one contended for by the appellants, the practice in the Mofussil generally is to declare the subsequent sale void and to direct the vendor to execute a conveyance; and, therefore, in the face of that practice, the appellant's contention cannot be upheld. Where the sale of a house has been completed, it is no longer open to the parties to undo such completed act so as to deprive the pre-emptor of his right to recover the house by a suit brought with that object. Such a case is clearly within the spirit and the words of s. 17 of Act IV of 1872, and the mere circumstance that, before suit brought, the purchaser re-sold his house to the original vendor would be no obstacle to the plaintiff getting a decree under that section directing defendant to sell the house to him. (21 B. 827, 24 C. 897, 31 A. 65, 27 Ch. Plaintiff received a portion of the purchase-money, agreed to clear the encumbrance himself within a certain time and execute a conveyance to the defendant on receipt of the balance at the time of the sale. Defendant continued in possession. Two years later, plaintiff, without clearing the encumbrance and executing the sale, sued defendant for rent of the house. There was no contract for payment of rent after the contract for sale. The defendant retained with himself the balance of the purchase-money towards the payment of the encumbrance. Held, the plaintiff was not entitled to the rent. The defendant remained in possession as purchaser and owner, and all that remained for the plaintiff to do was to clear the encumbrance and execute the sale to the defendant. Plaintiff having failed to do this, the fault was his own and he could not hold the defendant liable to the rent or damages. The principles of s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act were applicable to the case, though the Act was not in force at the place where the contract was entered into. (24 M. 449, R.) The effect of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act is to abrogate the rule of Hindu Law which recognised transfer by parol. But s. 54 has not yet been extended to Berar and the rule that a transfer of intangible, immoveable property of whatever value must be by registered deed cannot be enforced in Berar. (26 C. 1, 26 C. 39, Expl.) So the parties to a sale in Berar are not bound by law to reduce the terms of the transaction to the form of a document; but if they did reduce them to the form of a document, and the consideration for the sale exceeded Rs. 100, that document requires to be registered under s. 17 of the Registration Act, in the absence of which, the document cannot, with reference to s. 49, Registration Act, confer a valid title. And a transaction, which is effected by an unregistered instrument, does not become valid in law, because it is admitted and has been acted upon. The sale-deed was unregistered but the defendant had obtained possession on payment of the price: Held, (a) that the suit, though ostensibly for redemption of mortgage, was in reality a suit for the enforcement of the alleged stipulation to allow re-purchase; (b) that the sale was not ineffectual on account of non-registration of the sale-deed, because the defendant had paid the price and obtained possession and consequently had the equitable right to demand that the plaintiff should complete his title by a formal registered conveyance; (c) that, as the plaintiff had admitted in the plaint the factum of an absolute sale in favour of defendant it was unnecessary for the latter to prove the sale; (d) that the burden of proving the stipulation as to re-purchase lay on the plaintiff; (e) that, even if the suit be supposed to be for redemption of a mortgage by conditional sale, the burden of proving the alleged mortgage lay on the plaintiff who was out of possession. (38)—Sale of "right, title and interest of mortgagor"—What passes by such sale.—Although it is not the practice of the Mofussil Courts to require a mortgagee who sues for and obtains a sale of the mortgaged premises, formally to convey to the purchaser, and the latter must be contended with a certificate of sale to him of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, yet in fact, the interest of the mortgagee, who causes the sale to be made, is held to pass to the purchaser, and that mortgagee is completely estopped from disputing that such is the effect of the sale. (40)—Transaction, whether sale deed or mortgage, tests as to.—The usual indicia which might lead a Court to the opinion that a transaction was a mortgage and not a sale are—(1) insufficient consideration for the sale of the land, (2) a stipulation that the grantee should account for the rents during his possession or for payment of interest by the grantors either before, at, or, after the period named for the repurchase, (3) the lands remaining in the possession of the grantors after execution of the deeds, (4) any subsequent advance made by the grantee on the security of the lands, (5) any right on the part of the grantee to recover from the grantors the sum or any part of it, either before, at, or, after the period named for the re-purchase. BAPUJI APAJI v. SENAVARAJI MARDAVI, 2 B. 231.

(41)—Sale of mortgage-debt—Property outside jurisdiction.—The sale of a mortgage-debt, with a future and contingent right of enforcing payment by proceeding against the land, is not the sale of a right or interest in land. Therefore, though a Court may not have jurisdiction to attach lands out of its district, it would still have jurisdiction to sell in execution the right to enforce a mortgage lien upon such lands. Terms altered by Reuter in course of transmission—Liability of broker and of seller — Contract Act, ss. 230, 235.—In this suit plaintiff sued in respect of the non-delivery of certain shares in M. Company, which he alleged to have purchased from first defendant through brokers, the second and third defendants. The brokers having been authorised by plaintiff to buy at 20 cabled through Reuter Agency to the first defendant who was then in England that they could sell for him at Rs. 20. Reuter varied the message in the course of transmission by inserting the word "profit" before 20, and the first defendant cabled back "sell," which the brokers read as an acceptance of the offer actually made by them, whereas it was in fact an acceptance of the offer as altered by Reuter. Held that, as regards the first defendant, his acceptance was an acceptance of the offer he actually received in the cable as altered by Reuter, and he cannot be held liable to the plaintiff in this suit, as in such a case there was no contract between the plaintiff and the first defendant. A broker may act for both sides, and if he does not exceed the limits of his authority, he incurs no personal liability. To render the agent liable under s. 235, Contract Act, it is only necessary that the representation should have been untrue in fact, and it is not necessary to show that the agent was in any way to blame. Such a sale-deed cannot be set aside on the ground that there was a failure of consideration, viz., that the old man was not at all maintained by the vendee or his assigns. Though American Courts have set aside sales on this ground, so far as English Courts are concerned, the rule is that property passes by Registration and delivery, and there is no reason why that rule should be departed from in this case though the case may be a hard one. (47)— Vendor and Purchaser—Consideration for sale, payment of—Intention of parties.—It is a well-known principle of law that, to make a sale complete, it is not necessary that price should be paid. But the principle is subject to the qualification to the effect that ownership does not pass if there is proof of an intention in both the parties that ownership should not pass until payment of consideration. (62 P.R. 1879, 132 P.R. 1879, 40 P.R. 1906=78 P.L.R. 1907, 163 P.R. 1882, R.) (49)— Deed of sale, acted on—Absence of consideration—Intention of transferee that the deed should not be operative until the happening of a certain event—Effect of the deed.—A Hindu widow transferred by a deed of sale certain lands in favour of her nephew, and the nephew was informed of the deed. The transfer was also acted upon, in that the tenant in possession executed an agreement to the nephew. But the deed was always retained by the transferor. After the death of the nephew, his mother, being his legal heir, transferred the lands to the defendant. In a suit by the widow against the defendant for the recovery of the possession of the lands, it was found that no consideration passed from the nephew to the plaintiff, and that the widow intended the deed to become operative only on the event of her nephew outliving her. Held that the deed operated to convey to the nephew the title which it purported to convey, and that the plaintiff cannot be heard to say that she intended that title should not pass if the nephew pre-deceased her. If the parties intended title to pass, the fact that no consideration was paid does not prevent title from passing. AMIRTHAMMA v. that the amount actually due was something less than the amount stated and paid by the plaintiff. The plaintiff did not want to rescind the contract of sale, on the other hand he wanted to stick to the bargain: Held, that, so long as the sale subsisted, he was not entitled to a refund of the purchase money: Held, further, that, if representations were made regarding the nature and character of the property which affected its value, and those representations were subsequently found to be false to the knowledge of the party making them, the other party to the contract would be entitled to rescind the contract and to be relieved of the bargain, but, if he tested the accuracy of the statements made to him, he cannot be held to have been deceived and is not entitled to rescind the contract. (51)— Sale—Conveyance executed bona fide—No consideration paid—Sale not void—Vendor can sue for and recover the purchase money but cannot recover the property.—Where, in a bona fide sale transaction, the conveyance is properly executed, the mere fact that the consideration for the sale is not paid does not render the document absolutely void. HIKMATULLAH KHAN, 6 Ind. Cas. 117.

(52)—Vendor and purchaser—Payment of consideration, Onus as to--Effect of non-payment —Mutation entry, value of.—Held, (1) that the vendor having come into Court seeking special redress the initial onus rested on him, but the entry of the transaction of sale in the mutation register does not bring the case within the purview of s. 44 of the Land Revenue Act, until the entry, which may be the subject of appeal to the Collector, is incorporated in the Jamabandi: though it is relevant under s. 35 of the Evidence Act, as an entry in a public record made by a public servant in the discharge of his duty. That it lay on the defendant to satisfy the Court as to the payment of consideration previous to the mutation: But (2) that if there has been a completed sale for an ascertained price, part payment of which has taken place or payment is deferred by arrangement, the vendor cannot be permitted to withdraw and deny the transaction entirely. (53-a)—Sale of land by registered sale-deed — Recital of payment of consideration—Suit by purchaser for possession—Failure to pay purchase-money — Second sale to mortgagee in possession with prior title — Right of plaintiff to declaration of title and not to possession.—A executed a deed of sale of the land in suit in favour of B. The deed contained the recitals that the land was sold, and the consideration money received by the vendor, and possession delivered to the purchaser. After entry in the Registration Office books, the deed was delivered to the plaintiff who had the Registrar's receipt for presentation of the deed. Subsequently, A executed a second deed of sale of the same land in favour of C, a mortgagee in possession and caused it to be registered and dakhil kharij effected in his favour. In a suit by B against A and C for possession, the Commissioner found that B did not pay the consideration money for the sale, and held the sale to be not complete, but the Chief Court was of opinion that the transaction has passed beyond the stage of a mere contract for sale, and that the ownership of the land had passed to the plaintiff notwithstanding non-payment of the consideration. There is no rule of law that a sale of immoveable property is not complete and the ownership does not pass until the purchase-money is paid. So, in the absence of allegation and proof that the agreement for the sale contained not merely a promise to pay the purchase-money but a promise which constituted the payment a condition precedent to the deed taking effect as a transfer of ownership, it could not be said that the ownership would not pass and that the sale could not be deemed to have been completed as between the parties. ABBAS ALI SHAH v. PIR BUKSH, 132 P.R. 1879. [F., 192 P.R. 1882; R., 153 P.R. 1882, 91 P.R. 1902.]

One of them alone paid the consideration and took possession of the property. (54)—Registered sale-deed — Effect of, although the purchase money not paid.—A registered sale-deed passes the property to the vendee, although he fails to pay the vendor the purchase money, and although the deed of conveyance was never delivered to the vendee. (17 M. 146, 15 M. 54, 11 A. 244, 21 M. 56, Appr. & F.). In case of non-payment, the remedy of the vendor is to sue for the unpaid purchase money, for which he also has a lien. But he has no right, on account of non-payment, to cancel the sale-deed by another document, conveying the property to a third person; and such conveyance in favour of third person cannot prejudice the original vendee. KRISHNAN EMBRANDRI v. MARAKKAR, 1 M. L.T. 432.

(55)—Sale—Purchase-money partly paid—Vendor's lien—Right of vendor's decree-holder to bring the property to sale in execution as his judgment-debtor's property.—Where upon a sale a part of the sale consideration remains unpaid, the vendor has a lien on the property sold for the unpaid purchase-money. But this does not entitle any decree-holder of the vendor to bring the property to sale in execution of his decree as property of his judgment-debtor. He may attach the unpaid portion of the purchase-money which is due to his judgment-debtor and enforce his lien on the property, but he cannot cause the property purchased by a third party to be sold for the recovery of the unpaid purchase-money to which he, as decree-holder, is not entitled. MOTI LAL v. BHAGWAN DAS, 6 A.L.J. 645=31 A. 443.

(56)—Conveyance alleged to be a colourable transaction in fraud of creditors—Proof of execution and consideration not sufficient—Evidence essential regarding subsequent beneficial possession and conduct of parties.—This was a suit for a declaration that, under the alleged kubala set up by the defendants who were claimants to property sought to be sold by the plaintiff in execution of his decree, the property did not pass from the judgment-debtor. The Court of first instance found for the plaintiff, relying on the evidence as to the conduct of the parties subsequent to the alleged transfer, but this decision was reversed on appeal. In special appeal it was contended that the lower appellate Court was wrong in having held that, as the execution of the kubala and the passing of the consideration-money were proved, it was unnecessary to enquire further into the bona fides of the transaction, or to determine whether there was any transfer of the property which was good as against a creditor like the plaintiff. This contention was upheld by the High Court which ruled that where the main issue in an action is whether a conveyance is a real substantial transaction as between the parties to it and is not merely a colorable one in fraud of creditors, the proof of the execution of the deed and the passing of a sum of money as consideration, goes but a short way towards establishing the validity of the transfer as against the creditor who disputes it and, there can be no dobut that evidence as to the subsequent beneficial possession of the property and generally of the mode in which the parties deal with it, is most important. (57)—Colourable, explained.—Collusion between a debtor and his ostensible vendee to defraud a judgment-creditor by pretending that a sale of the debtor's property has taken place when there has been, in fact, no genuine sale but only a colourable (that is, a sham) one to protect the property of the debtor, does not prevent the judgment creditor from proceeding against such property as still the property of his judgment-debtor (the sham vendor). But a real sale of any survivang interest of the debtor, if it takes place before the property has been attached or specially bound by the decree, will hold good, even though such sale may prevent the creditor from getting his decree executed against the property. In a suit for possession as owner on the ground of foreclosure of the mortgage, if the notice of foreclosure is held as invalid and irregular, decree for possession in lieu of the mortgage-money due to the plaintiff as mortgagee may be passed in his favour when the plaintiff is by the terms of his mortgage entitled to possession. The deed of transfer was dated the 8th March 1892. The plaintiff alleged that about a month previously to the institution of the suit he came to know of the transfer, which was to all intents and purposes a sale, and that limitation was saved under s. 18 of the Limitation Act, by reason of the transfer having been fraudulently concealed from him. To establish fraud it was contended for the plaintiff that there had been no dakhil kharij, and change of possession, and the vendor had been representing himself, and dealing with the property, as the person in proprietary possession of it. Held, (i) that as physical possession of the whole property conveyed could not pass eo instanti to the transferee, inasmuch as it included a share in the shamilat land, the period of limitation, i.e. one year, under art. 10 of the 2nd schedule of the Limitation Act began to run from the date of registration of the deed of transfer; and (ii), that the plaintiff had failed to prove such fraud on the part of the defendants as would entitle him to the benefit of s. 18 of the Limitation Act. The expression 'fraud' as used in s. 18 of the Limitation Act means, and can only mean, active deceit in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud a person of his rights by artful device. In all cases where fraud is alleged it ought to be set forth specifically in particular and in detail. The mere omission to give a pre-emptor notice of the sale even in a case where there had been no outward and visible change of possession does not constitute fraud. To bring a case under s. 18 of the Limitation Act, the fraudulent act which kept the plaintiff from knowledge of the transfer must, in order to extend the period of limitation, be one which occurred while the plaintiff still had a right to institute the suit. Obiter dictum.—That the transaction must be regarded as a gift by the husband to the wife rather than a sale. (70)—Sale by Registrar—Dwelling house—Mis-statement in abstract of title—Payment into Court—Subsequent discovery of mis-statement—Recession of sale.—A purchaser of a dwelling house at a Registrar's sale accepted the conditions of sale, whereby he was required to furnish requisitions and objections, if any, within a fortnight after delivery of abstract (and in this respect time was the essence of the contract), and he was not entitled to call for any other documents except those abstracted or for the originals of the documents of which the vendor had only copies, and was to accept the title as shewn in the abstract of title. By the abstract it was represented to the purchaser that he was purchasing the entire sixteen annas of the house and premises. The purchaser accepted the title as shown in the abstract, and paid the balance of the purchase-money into Court, without reserving any right to object to the title. He then applied to be discharged from such purchase and for leave to withdraw the purchase-money from Court, on the ground that he had subsequently discovered that only an eight-twelfth share of the house had been sold to him and that he had been misled in the purchase by misrepresentations contained in the conditions of sale and the abstract of title: —Held that, although there was no fraud on the part of the vendor, he knew or had the means of knowing, that the sixteen annas share of the property could not be sold, and if the purchaser's allegations are true, the Court would not enforce the contract. Pro. Code (Act* XIV of 1882).—The first defendant's land was sold by Government for arrears of revenue and was bought by second defendant. The plaintiffs who had obtained a money decree, against the first defendant, brought this suit, alleging that the second defendant purchased the land on behalf of the first defendant, and in order to evade attachment of the same, and held the land as trustee for the first defendant. The plaint prayed (inter alia) that, on payment of the arrears of revenue, the sale be set aside, and for a declaration, under Chap. VI of the Specific Relief Act, that the land was the property of the first defendant and was held by the second defendant as trustee for the first defendant. The District Court held the sale for arrears of revenue could not be set aside (which decision was admittedly correct), and without considering the other prayers in the plaint dismissed the suit. Held, that, although the plaint was defective, as it contained no allegation of the attachment and the objection, yet, as the allegations in the plaint (as set out above) showed clearly that the plaintiffs' object was to vindicate their right to attach the property, an amendment of the plaint should be allowed now, more especially, as the second defendant actually suggested the issue "does the second defendant hold the said lands in trust for the first defendant?" It was admitted that Chap. VI of the Specific Relief Act does not apply to the case, but it was argued that, long before the suit was instituted, the plaintiffs attached the land in execution of their decree, and the second defendant applied for the removal of the attachment, but his application was adjourned pending the decision of the suit. Held that, a person, who claims to be the owner of the attached property, has a right of suit quite independent of s. 283 of the Civ. Pro. Code (23 B. 266, F.) Held, also, that there is no reason why a decree-holder should not have a like right of suit, provided he has attached the property, and his right to attach it has been disputed. Held, further that, as plaintiffs not only claimed reliefs to which they were not the date both of his deed and of its registration were anterior to those of the defendant. On special appeal, the defendant set up also that prior to the plaintiff's purchase he had obtained possession of the property under a parol contract of sale, and that the lower appellate Court was wrong in not having enquired into that fact and given him the benefit of the priority which would have arisen therefrom, but it was held that he could not set up the parol sale against the plaintiff's registered kobala in the face of s. 68 of the Act. Defendant also objected that the lower Court should not have omitted to determine the bona fides of the purchase of the plaintiff. But the High Court held that the objection was not as such tenable though there might have been some force in it if the defendant distinctly and, in express terms, had raised an issue as to the nature of the plaintiff's contract of sale, and distinctly stated not only that it was fraudulent but also the way is which the fraud was intended to be carried out against him (the defendant). (84)—Unregistered sale-deed—Distinction between evidentiary admissions and admissions by the pleadings--Transfer of Property Act, s. 55 (2) —Caveat emptor—Restoration of purchase money on sale being void—Contract Act, ss. 20 and 65.—There is a distinction between evidentiary admissions and admissions by the pleadings. S. 58, Evidence Act, governs admissions by the pleadings. Although a sale-deed is inadmissible in evidence as being unregistered, an admission by the (vendor) defendant, in his preliminary examination, of an agreement alleged in the plaint, to the effect that he would make good any loss the (plaintiff) purchaser might incur in respect of the property sold, is not excluded by s. 91, Evidence Act, and renders proof of the agreement unnecessary. Plaintiff sued to recover a certain sum, alleging that he bought for that sum a piece of land as a house site from the defendants, they agreeing to make good any loss he might incur in respect of the transaction, and that the Collector thereafter declared the land to be State and refused permission to him to build on it. Held that in the face of such an agreement, the rule of caveat emptor cannot be applied. Apart from the agreement, it is doubtful whether the maxim itself is current in India and retains validity in respect of the vendor's title. Moreover, the principle of s. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, under which the seller passes a covenant for title, ought to be followed as a matter of justice, equity and good conscience, although the Transfer of Property Act itself is not in force in Upper Burma. Again, both the parties believed at the time of the sale that the land was bobabaing and they had no knowledge or warning that it would be subsequently declared to be State. This is, therefore, such a mistake as is referred to in s. 20 of the Contract Act, and s. 65 of that Act requires the

(86)—Conveyance alleged to be a colourable transaction in fraud of creditors—Proof of execution and consideration not sufficient—Evidence essential regarding subsequent beneficial possession and conduct of parties.—This was a suit for a declaration that, under the alleged kubala set up by the defendants who were claimants to property sought to be sold by the plaintiff in execution of his decree, the property did not pass from the judgment-debtor. The Court of first instance found for the plaintiff, relying on the evidence as to the conduct of the parties subsequent to the alleged transfer, but this decision was reversed on appeal. In special appeal, it was contended that the lower appellate Court, was wrong in having held that, as the execution of the kubala and the passing of the consideration money were proved, it was unnecessary to enquire further into the bona fides of the transaction, or to determine whether there was any transfer of the property which was good as against a creditor like the plaintiff. This contention was upheld by the High Court which ruled that where the main issue in an action is whether a conveyance is a real substantial transaction as between the parties to it and is not mere a colourable one in fraud of creditors, the proof of the execution of the deed and the passing of a sum of money as consideration, goes but a short way towards establishing the validity of the transfer as against the creditor who disputes it and, there can be no doubt that evidence as to the subsequent beneficial possession of the property and generally of the mode in which the parties deal with it, is most important. question no such intention was expressed. But it was contended that such an intention was necessarily implied because the trees had been mortgaged to the defendant prior to the sale and no mention was made of the mortgage in the deed of sale. The plaintiff could not secure the khobala lands, nor any land equivalent to them. He sued to obtain those identical lands or the lands which had been allotted to his vendor. Held, that the plaintiff is entitled to follow the lands allotted to his vendor, the widow, in lieu of the lands conveyed to him; and that, if the widow had absolute interest, the plaintiff will get such interest, and if not the conveyance to the plaintiff would not operate after her death. "The purchasor will not be entitled to call for the originals of any document or to object to the title on the ground of the non-production of any other documents . . ." Held that the sale in question was not one by the Court, but was one made by the Commissioner of Partition under the authority of the Court, and that the conditions of sale in this case did not preclude the purchasers from raising the question of the vendor's title. The distinction between a sale by the Court and a sale under the authority of the Court or out of Court is that, in the one case, the Court makes the title to the purchaser, and, in the other case, the Courts only authorise either the parties to the suit or the person having the carriage of the proceedings to sell the property and to make a title to the purchaser. Plaintiff admitted execution of the deed of sale but alleged that the sale had never been completed, as the agreement was that defendant should pay the purchase-money 10 days after the date of the deed and that he had not done this and refused to return the deed. Plaintiff did not succeed in establishing his allegations, and even if he had proved all of them, he would not have been entitled to set aside the sale, without proof that it was mutually agreed that, on default of payment, the sale should be void. The burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff who had admitted execution of the deed of sale reciting payment of consideration in full and desiring relief upon an allegation of circumstances inconsistent with the terms of his own deed, viz., an unfulfilled promise to pay ten days afterwards. He failed to establish his own case and never divulged the real truth of the transaction and this was fatal to the plaintiff's claim, because, not knowing the true state of facts, it was impossible to determine the relief to which the plaintiff was really entitled. (99)—Judgment-debtor's right to sell away property until seizure, not affected by mere intent to obstruct judgment-creditor—Fraudulent object of concealing ownership.—An embarrassed debtor after decree may sell his property right and left till it is actually attached, though this may, in the result, greatly, inconvenience his creditor. He may sell his property until the moment of its seizure, and there is nothing to prevent him from doing so till the property is in custodia legis. The question whether or not the intent was to defeat and delay the creditor is not material. The only thing that could vitiate the sale would be to prove that there was really none and that the object was to put the property into a state of concealment as to its owner. The main question in such a case is therefore whether there was or not a sale as a fact, and this is not dependent on the payment of the purchase-money, for a sale is complete when the purchase-money is agreed to be paid. A mortgage had foreclosed under Ben. Reg. XVII of 1806, and a decree was made in 1854 for possession of the mortgaged taluk. In 1855, a summary suit was brought by the zemindar against the heirs of the talukdar (the mortgagor) for arrears of rent, to which the mortgagee was not made a party. A decree for sale was made ex parte, and the taluk sold by auction, under Act VI of 1858. who had deposited a sum of money to stay a sale of crops in execution of a decree against certain ryots, whose personal property the crops were found to be, sued to recover the money. The High Court concurred with the lower Court in its view that the Jageerdar had no right to sue for the money as the decree was issued against the ryots, as the crops attached were theirs, not plaintiff's, and as the deposit would only be considered as recoverable on their suit. Also the Jageerdar could not sue under s. 102 or 103 of Act X of 1859 since he had made the payment voluntarily in his own name when the ryots, against whose crops the execution was issued, were alone justified to make the deposits. The policy of the said Regulation and of the Revenue Sale Law is the same, i.e., to protect those who are shown to have interests when the property in which they have those interests is brought to sale for the default of others. (3)—Reg. VIII of 1819—Putnee in possession of Girurdar—Suit for possession by purchaser—Cause of action.—Payment of Girurdar's debts.—A person who, having deposited arrears of rent of a putnee, takes possession as Girurdar under Reg. Though, strictly speaking, by Reg. VIII of 1819, the fact that the Girurdar has realized his debt from the usufruct of the tenure, should be established "in a suit instituted for the purpose," still, if in a suit for possession by the purchaser of a share of a putnee, the defendant claims to hold absolutely, alleging that he has purchased the putnee in satisfaction of his ancestor's lien as Girurdar, and on failing to prove his plea, is allowed to fall back upon his title as Girurdar, the plaintiff must be allowed to prove that the debt has been realized from the usufruct of the tenure, though it is not "a suit instituted for the purpose." (5)—Act X of 1859, s. 105—Sale of transferable tenures for arrears of rent—Payment made to save estate—Suit to recover payments.—When a putnee is sold for arrears of rent, all intermediate holdings between the zemindar and the ryot are cancelled; but this is not the case when such transferable tenures as gantee-jummas are sold under s. 105 of Act X of 1859. The present plaintiff D, took a mourousee pottah from A, one of the shares in a gantee-jumma and bound himself by certain stipulations to A. The zemindar, after decree obtained, put up the gantee-jumma for sale of arrears and D paid the amount of the zemindar's claim; he now sued for a share of the money paid by him in proportion to the extent borne by B and C the other co-sharers in the property. D urged that he had paid the sum to save his interest in the mokuraree lease, and that he was entitled to make the payment in order to stay the sale, which would have injured him, and to recover the money paid for that purpose. This contention was not accepted by the High Court which held that the right to make payments to preserve an interest, and to recover the sums paid, is given by express statute in the case of sales for arrears of revenue (s. 19, Act XI of 1859), and a sale of putnee tenure (s. 13, Reg. VIII of 1819). But it is not given in respect of the sales of other under-tenures under Act X of 1859. In the result, it was concluded that, though the plaintiff's mourousee pottah was liable to cancelment under the sale, still, as the defendants to whom plaintiff was confessedly a stranger, neither expressly nor impliedly requested that he would make the payment for them, the present action against them would not lie it having been a voluntary payment on his part. He then sued the mouroseedar for the recovery of the money paid by him. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that there was no obligation on the part of the plaintiff to pay the sum. On appeal, the lower appellate Court remanded the case for trial on two issues, first, "Whether the payment of the amount under claim by plaintiff was unnecessary and voluntary; and secondly, whether the plaintiff was legally bound to deposit the said amount, and whether the defendant had been benefited thereby." Held that though the lower appellate Court was right in remanding the case, yet the issue that ought to be tried in the case was, whether the plaintiff was a party who came under the provisions of s. 6 of Act VIII of 1865 (B.C.) read with s. 13 of Reg. appeal by S to the Privy Council from the decree under which the plaintiff had sold the putnee, that decree was reversed. S having died, it was contended on behalf of his representative that the payment made by the plaintiff was not made for his benefit or at his request and that he cannot be liable for it, as the plaintiff had all along denied his title. The High Court however held that, under the circumstances, plaintiff was entitled to be reimbursed the amount expended by him by those for whom the putnee had been thereby saved. lower appellate Court gave the plaintiff a decree holding that his tenure was one not protected by s. 16 of Act VIII of 1865. The High Court agreed with the lower Court in holding that the tenure of the plaintiff did not fall within the purview of the said section, but was of opinion that that Court was wrong in having decreed payment with interest of the sum claimed by plaintiff, for, under cl. 4 of s. 13 of Reg. VIII of 1819, which, by s. 6 of Act VIII of 1865, was made applicable to payments of this description, the plaintiff's deposit must be considered as a loan made to the proprietor of the tenure to preserve it from sale by such deposit, and the tenure so preserved becoming security to the plaintiff, he must be considered to have a lien thereon, and the plaintiff would be entitled on applying for the same, to obtain possession of the tenure of the defaulter in order to recover the amount so deposited from any profits belonging thereto. This plea was rejected and a decree given to the landlord who in execution of such decree sold the tenure. Plaintiff now sued to set aside the sale on the ground of illegality owing to the previous alleged deposit. The High Court held that the mere incident of a deposit would not give to the tenants sued any ground to institute a civil action to set aside a sale made in execution of a decree under Act X of 1859. decree obtained by the zamindar against his putneedar for arrears of rent due to him, he brought the putnee taluk to sale and purchased it himself. The zemindar was, later on, put in possession of the property purchased by him. The durputneedar now sued to recover possession of the taluk by avoiding the sale. The question for decision was whether the purchaser of the putnee taluk could disturb the possession of the durputneedar. Held that, under the description putnee taluk and durputnee taluk, it must be prima facie intended that the tenure called a putnee tenure was one transferable by sale, and upon the creation of which, it was stipulated by the terms of the engagements interchanged that, in case of an arrear occurring, the estate might be brought to sale. If so, according to the terms of Reg. VIII of 1819, the tenure might not only be brought to sale, but it might be sold free from incumbrances. Consequently, according to the effect of s. 105 of Act X of 1859 and ss. 8 and 11 of Reg. VIII of 1819 and probably also of Reg. I of 1820, the effect of the sale of the putnee taluk was to destroy all incumbrances which had been created by the putneedar including the durputnee. The suit was therefore not maintainable. At the time, the sale of a tenure could only be free of encumbrances if it took place in accordance with the provisions of Reg. VIII of 1819. The material condition precedent to a sale being within the Regulation, as given in s. 8, is that "the right of selling or bringing to sale for an arrear of rent may have been specially reserved by stipulation in the engagements interchanged on the creation of the tenure." Although the respondents who were the sons of the defaulter were found to have been in possession for 20 years yet they were occupying merely as members of the family of the defaulter, and not as having any independent tenure or right of their own. Appellant who had purchased the rights of the outgoing tenant was entitled to be put in possession of the entire tenure as it stood. The outgoing tenant had no right to retain a portion of the tenure while giving up the rest. Also the circumstances that the purchaser happened to be the superior landlord in no way affected his rights. TEELOTTUMA DEBEE v. BROJO LALL SHAMUNT, 8 W.R. 478.

(8)—Decree for arrears of rent, sale of tenure under, effect of—Joint-liability of co-sharers.—The decree in this case was for arrears of rent due upon the tenure for which all the co-sharers were jointly liable; and, though the rights and interests of certain parties alone were specified as having been sold by the sale proceedings their names were evidently made use of because they were the parties registered in the books of the zemindar. Under the circumstances, agreeing with the lower Court, the High Court held that, notwithstanding the announcement of particular rights and interests in the sale proceedings, the tenure itself should be deemed to have been sold so that the rights and interests of the plaintiff's vendor who was one of the co-proprietors, whatever such rights were, ceased on such sale. ALIMOODDEEN v. SABIR KHAN, 8 W.R. 60.

(9)—Sale in execution of decree for rent—Purchase of under-tenure—Rights of purchaser—Suit for kabuliat.—The plaintiff on special appeal contended that, as he was the purchaser of the tenure in question, he was not bound, either by the nature of his purchase or by reason of uniform payments, to regard the several pottahs, but he was entitled to rent at the rate which similar ryots paid for similar lands in the neighbouring places The High Court upheld this contention. Plaintiff had purchased, not in execution of an ordinary decree but in execution of a decree for rent, and could therefore avoid any lease or holding within his tenure not specially protected by law and was therefore entitled to a kubuliat at rates paid for similar lands in the neighbourhood. The case was therefore remanded to the Judge with directions to inquire into the rates paid by similar ryots for similar lands in places adjacent to the lands of the defendant and to give plaintiff whatever rate of rent may, after such enquiry, seem to be fair and equitable. (23)—Sale of rights and interests of ryots in execution of decree—Subsequent sale of decree for arrears of rent, not affected by priority of execution-sale.—Plaintiff sued to recover possession of land alleging purchase of it at an execution-sale of the rights and interests of ryots holding heritable and transferable tenures under the zemindar. He had been opposed in taking possession in execution by one K, the present special appellant. This K had purchased the tenure at a sale for arrears of rent due to the zemindar by the above said ryots, judgment-debtors, and the plaintiffs respondent instituted this suit against him for annulment of the sale. K the defendant-appellant replied that the plaintiff respondent's purchase extended only to the rights and interests of the judgment-debtors, whereas, he, as purchaser under Act X of 1859, bought the tenure itself. The High Court held, reversing the decree passed by the Sudder Amin in favour of the plaintiff on the ground of the priority of his purchase, that the first sale at which the plaintiff-respondent was purchaser was of the rights and interests of the ryots, the judgment-debtors. Plaintiff, as such purchaser, stood in the exact position of the old ryots and, whilst he succeeded to their privileges, was bound by their engagements with the zemindar. The first of these was the payment of rent, and, as the plaintiff neglected to discharge it, the zemindar was perfectly justified in bringing Act X into operation, and selling the tenure itself, and the priority of the sale in plaintiff's favour could not affect the point at issue inasmuch as the two things sold to the plaintiff and defendant were not one and the same. (2)—Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 8, cl. 2—Sale of putni taluq—Attestation of service of notice by three substantial persons—Meaning of "substantial."—This was a suit for the reversal of the sale of a putni taluq, on the ground that the notice required by cl. 2, s. 8, Reg. VIII of 1819, had not been duly served. On second appeal, the High Court agreed with the lower Courts and confirmed the sale on the ground that, as there were three attesting witnesses of comparative respectability to the service of the notice, the requirements of the law had been fulfilled. On an application for review, it was however held that, though the attesting parties were sufficient in number and resided in the neighbourhood, yet with the exception of one of them the rest were not what could be called substantial persons within the meaning of s. 8 of the above Regulation. It was to protect the putneedar from fraud that the above provision has been enacted that the notice of sale must be attested by three substantial persons, by which is meant respectable men of moderate wealth against whom, in case of false attestation, the party injured may have his remedy in a suit for damages, and unless the attesting parties answer to the above common meaning to be put upon the words "substantial," the putneedar would be wholly without remedy in case of false attestation. since the sale cannot be deemed to have been partly reversed and partly upheld. Where one plaintiff has set aside the sale to recover possession of his share, the other shareholders become entitled to recover at their pleasure, there being no sale to set aside. There is no meaning in a shareholder being compelled to sue, so far as regards his own share, for the reversal of a proceeding already declared absolutely null and void at the instance of another shareholder on the ground of material irregularity. In the present case, however, plaintiff prayed not for possession, because, the putnee had been sold again ; but, he demanded mesne profits for the time when the sharer whose rights he had purchased was illegally out of possession by reason of a sale which ought never to have taken place and which was therefore reversed. He was, in the result, held to be entitled to the mesne profits sued for by him, the High Court observing that the case was not one similar to an action for trespass in which it may be argued that one sharer could not lawfully take advantage of the activity and the result of a suit brought by another sharer. (5)—Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 9, cl. 2—Putni estate—Arrears of rent—Suit to set aside sale—Notice—Payment into Court.—An instalment of rent having been due from certain putnidars, a proclamation was issued under the provisions of Reg. VIII of 1819 fixing the day of sale. Before that day, a sum of money sufficient to cover the arrears was deposited in the Collectorate by one of the putnidars, the payment being made to the Collector's accountant, who gave a receipt for it, but no intimation of the payment was given to the Collector. Accordingly, the sale proceeded, and the putnidars sued to have it annulled. Held (Mitter, J., contra) that there is nothing in Reg. VIII of 1819 which empowers a putnidar to make a deposit either in the Judge's Court, or in the Collectorate before the day of sale, or which gives to such payment, if made, the effect of payment to the zemindar or his agent, and that plaintiffs had no ground to ask for relief on any principle of equity. An application for the sale of a tenure where a right of sale has been specially reserved with a view to the realization of rent, is quite distinct from a suit, proceedings thereon being more nearly analogous to the remedy by distress. It is not competent to a defendant to bring money into Court privately and secretly on an ex parte application without notice to plaintiff either before or after payment. KRISHNA MOHUN SAHA v. MUNSHI AFTABUDDIN MAHOMED, 8 B.L.R. 134=15 W.R. 560.

VIII of 1819 and caused their putni right to be sold, and in consequence of that, the plaintiffs, the holders of a seputni interest of a portion of the lands let out in putni, being dispossessed by the purchasers (the defendants), brought a suit valued in accordance with the value of their seputni right to recover possession of their seputni interest thereof, on the allegation that the sale was brought about in collusion between the putnidars and the auction-purchaser, that the proceedings taken by the zemindar were bad, because they were taken against a deceased person, who was no longer the putnidar, and that the sale notification was not duly and legally served upon the property (they however asking no relief against the zemindar, who was made a formal defendant on the record), held, that although the validity of the sale was questioned in the plaint, still the suit was not one under s. 14, Reg. VIII of 1819, no relief being claimed against the zemindar, and that a suit under the provisions of s. 14 to reverse the sale of the whole putni was the only remedy of the plaintiffs. The notice should be stuck up in the cutchery of the Collector, and a copy or extract of the notice published at the cutchery or principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter. The sale in this case having been reversed, the purchaser was held entitled, under s. 14, to a refund of his purchase-money and to recover his costs from the zemindar. BAIKANTHA NATH SINGH v. Inadequacy of price, supposing the fact to be so, would be no ground for setting aside a sale regularly held. The jurisdiction of a particular Judge over a certain place does not necessarily imply the jurisdiction of a Collector, or more exactly the situation of that place within a Collectorate bearing the same name within the Zillah of the Judge. It is no valid ground for impeaching a sale, otherwise good, to say that other sales, which apparently might have been set aside, had been conducted elsewhere. KALEE KOOMAR MOOKERJEE v. Where on a claim being presented under the rules contained in Act X of 1859, a Collector passes judgment, the party dissatisfied with the order is not bound to bring a suit to establish his right within one year, unless the claim has been duly heard as prescribed by s.107 of the Act. Where the claimant is not examined, and no evidence is taken as directed by the law, and the Collector merely records a memo on the petition, and disallows the claim, it cannot be said that there has been a fair trial. (18)—Sale of tenure in execution of rent-decree under s. 105 of Act X—Under-tenures—Fraud and collusion in sale, effect of—Proof of.—Plaintiffs claimed as purchasers of the interests of one M in certain land under a se-morosee pottah granted to him by a third party. The title of BM, one of the defendants was based on a purchase of the property by him at a sale of the tenure in execution of a decree for arrears of rent under Act X of 1859, at the suit of another defendant G against one H. Plaintiffs in the present suit prayed to have it declared that they had an absolute right to the mourosee tenure of the land with the buildings thereon at a fixed rate of rent, that the purchase of the defendant BM, gave him no right in the property and that he had therefore no right to claim rent from the plaintiffs. Held that the title of the defendant BM, as purchaser under a decree against H., must stand or fall with the decree; the present plaintiffs who were no parties to the decree might show that it was obtained by fraud and collusion and for the purpose of defeating their rights. The question had also to be tried whether H had any interest in the premises included under his original dur-mourosee pottah at the time of the sale and, for these purposes, the High Court directed the remand of the suit for re-trial. MESSRS. JOHN BORRADAILE & CO. v. MR. A. C. GREGORY, 2 W.R. Act X, Rul. 63.

(19)—Principal and agent—Fraud of agent—Sale—Purchase by agent—Constructive trust.—The plaintiffs and defendants in this case were co-sharers of a putnee talook which was brought to sale under Reg. VIII of 1819. The agent for the plaintiffs and the agent for the defendants were both ready at the Collectorate on the day of sale, prepared to pay their shares of the rent. It was arranged that the agent of the plaintiffs should get ready a petition for the purpose of lodging the rents and that the agent of the defendants should remain in Court to watch the proceedings and should give notice when the sale commenced. Contrary to the terms of this arrangement, the agent of the defendants purchased the putnee at the sale that took place during the absence of the agent of the plaintiffs. Held that it was an act of bad faith amounting to fraud on the part of the agent of the defendants to remain and purchase the putnee without making any attempt to inform the Collector or to convey any information to the plaintiffs' agent that the lot was about to be called up. Held further that the defendants' agent must be treated as having made the purchase on account of, and as a trustee for, the plaintiffs to the extent of their share. The sale therefore, so far as it creates a title in favour of the defendants to the plaintiffs' share of the putnee, must be declared void, though it was valid as between the Collectors, the Zamindar and the defaulting putneedars. The intention of the Regulation as regards the date of the sale and the era to be followed was to lay down a uniform practice in each locality. Uniformity was the essential requirement and the particular date only the form for enforcing regularity, and a practice which has been established for a course of years, and which can cause no substantial detriment to any of the parties concerned, and which is reasonable and convenient in itself, is not liable to objection in a mere point of form. Where no tender was made before the sale of the amount of rent due, the Court is not justified in setting aside a sale under Reg. Upon this application orders for sale were issued under Act VIII of 1859. So, if rent was due from the tenant (mortgagor) and the zemindar obtained a decree for rent, the zemindar is not bound to give notice to the mortgagee of the tenure, before the former sells the same under the decree for rent. tenure, if he had taken proper steps to do so, or although the purchasers may have obtained possession of the whole tenure under the sale. (Illustrated by 6 I.A. 47). But if, on the other hand, it appears that the judgment-debtor has been sued as representing the ownership of the whole tenure, and that the sale, though purporting to be of the right and interest of the judgment-debtor only, was intended to be, and in justice and equity ought to operate as a sale of the tenure, the whole tenure must then be considered, as having passed by the sale. (32)—Act VIII (B.C.) of 1869, s. 64—Sale of ganti — Gantidaree right against under-tenants.—In a suit for arrears of rent, the defendants pleaded that no relationship of landlord and tenant existed between them and the plaintiff, and the Court found that the plaintiff was the sole owner of an estate of which the gantidar held in part, that is to say, as to a 12 anna share of his under-tenure, he being liable to pay the rent of the other 4 annas to the owner of the neighbouring estate. Plaintiff brought the ganti to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due on the 12 anna share and purchased it himself, and the decree not being fully satisfied caused the tenant right in the 4 anna share to be sold and purchased it also. Held that s. 64 of Act VIII (B.C.) of 1869 did not apply, because the plaintiff was not a sharer in a joint undivided estate and that by his purchase, the plaintiff had become the absolute owner of the 12 annas' ganti, that is to say, of the share which fell within his estate, and as to the other 4 annas, he had acquired the right, title and interest of the last registered tenant. The result of that was to place him in the position, as against the under-tenants, of holding the 16 annas' gantidaree right subject to some possible question to be raised as regards the ultimate right to the 4 annas, which question, however, did not concern the under-tenants, they being bound to pay to the plaintiff as de facto gantidar, unless any of them should be found to have occupied the land without payment of rent. Absence of disclaimer of talookdaree right by plaintiff—Estoppel of Government.—Plaintiff sued for confirmation of his right as a shikmee talukdar under the Zemindar, the Government who became the purchaser of the estate under a sale for arrears of revenue. The Government pleaded that plaintiff had taken from it farming leases and executed kubooleuts inconsistent with the existence of the talook and that therefore it was now incompetent to him to claim under a title which, on the supposition that it once existed, he had advisedly relinquished. Held that Government had recognized the talook of the plaintiff and had sold it for arrears of rent to parties from whom the plaintiff claimed; and no clear disclaimer of his talookdaree title had ever been made by plaintiff. It was not competent to Government to deny the title of a tenure which they had, by selling once, guaranteed to the purchasers JEEBUN SINGH BURMONO v. THE COLLECTOR OF BACKERGUNGE, 2 W.R. 77.

upheld on appeal. Plaintiff then brought her suit in the Civil Court. Held that s. 29, Act VIII (B.C.) of 1869 was not applicable to this suit, which was for a fractional share of certain arrears of rent after determination of a question raised by defendants for their own purposes, and came under the ordinary Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859. Held that plaintiff was, under s. 14, Act XIV of 1859, entitled to an allowance of the period during which she was bona fide prosecuting her claim in the Revenue Court which from defect of jurisdiction, was not able to try it. (3)—Execution by Civil Court not ipso facto legal—Persons not parties to decree or exempted from it, not liable to be proceeded against—Tenure, how far liable for its own arrears.—It was urged on special appeal in this case: 1st.—That cl. 6, s. 23, Act X of 1859, contemplates suit only for illegal ouster, and as plaintiff's ouster was by process of Court,—i.e., under orders of the Civil Courts, there was no illegal ouster, and consequently plaintiff's action was not maintainable. 2nd.—That every tenure is hypothecated for its own arrears so that every tenant of such tenure is liable to ejectment on failure to pay any rents due on the tenure and that thus the plaintiff was liable to be ejected from the tenure of the defaulter as he had not paid the arrears, and, consequently, there was the absence of any such illegal ejectment as could warrant the lower Courts giving the plaintiff a decree for possession. Both of the above grounds were held by the High Court to be untenable. On the first, the High Court observed that the fact of there being action under process of a Civil Court does not make such action ipso facto legal. Such an action would be illegal where it has been taken against persons who are not parties to the decree or, as was the case with the plaintiff here, or are distinctly exempted from the operation of the decree with possession reserved in express terms. On the second plea, the Court remarked that it is only when tenures are sold for their own arrears that there is a hypothecation and a liability of the tenure itself, in other hands than the defaulter's; for the arrears, and, that even then each case must be decided by its own circumstances. UMRUT LALL BHOSE v. SOORUBEE DOSSEE, 2 W.R. Act X, Rul. 86.

(3)—Equitable charge—Suppression of such a charge at a revenue sale, effect of.—A purchased certain villages in the name of his son B. A being indebted to C, executed a mortgage-bond, and deposited the title-deed of these villages with C as security for the debt. C. afterwards, sued A, for recovery of the mortgage-debt, and ultimately obtained a decree in his favour. Pending this suit A died and was succeeded by B, his heir, against whom the suit was revived. B became a defaulter to Government, when the Government authorities seized the villages, and took steps for bringing them to sale to satisfy the Government demands. C informed the Government officer of his claim, and petitioned to have the sale stayed, but the Collector sold the villages as the property of B, suppressing the notice of the equitable charge of C upon the villages. C then sued B, the Collector and the auction-purchasers, claiming to be entitled to the sale-proceeds of the villages in the hands of the Government in satisfaction of his mortgage-debt. The Sudder Dewanny Court dismissed the claim of the plaintiff on the ground that the decree, made in the suit against A, was against the effects of A, and only applied to such property as B was in possession of at that time; that, as it had been sold to realise the demands of Government, the decree did not apply to the villages. Such judgment, on appeal, reversed, Judicial Committee holding: First, that the suit was properly instituted for recovery of the sale-proceeds in possession of Government, as the decree obtained by C against B operated as a conversion of the estate of A, making it assets in B's hands, which C had a right to follow. Secondly, that, as the Government had notice of C's equitable charge upon the villages, and suppressed that fact at the auction-sale to the purchasers, there was a clear equity in C to call upon the Government for payment out of the auction-proceeds received by them, and to have an account directed of the amount received by the Collector from the sale of the villages with interest, so far as the amount received would extend to the payment of his mortgage-debt. The talook was not cancelled and the Government made successive temporary settlements with A in which his talookdari right was recognised. The right and interest of Government in the pargannah were afterwards sold to B who ousted A. What operates to create the property recognised as a right of occupancy in the entry of the occupant's name in the Collector's books. A mere memorandum, therefore, declaring a person to be the successful bidder at the sale is not an instrument creating or declaring an interest in immoveable property, and requiring registration under s. 18, Act XX of 1866. The Collector may be responsible to the mortgagee of a revenue defaulter for refusing to accept the tender made by him of the Government rent, but if he does refuse it and the land is sold, the title of the purchaser is unimpeachable. (10)—Kistbundy—Revenue fixed by monthly instalments—Sale for arrears of monthly kist —Reg. V of 1812—Liability of whole estate to sale—Surety bond for payment of kist—Liability of zemindari to sale.—A written instrument or kistbundy, for securing the payment of the kist by monthly instalments, though usual and advisable, is not necessary to entitle the Government to enforce such payment, if the revenue be a fixed monthly kist or instalment. By Regs. XIV of 1793 and VII of 1799, the Governor-General in Council may legally order a sale for the arrears of a monthly instalment of revenue before the close of the year, but to warrant that act, there must be an arrear of a previous year or of a monthly instalment. By Reg. V of 1812, if there be an arrear of the annual assessment or of a fixed monthly kist or instalment of that assessment unpaid on the first day of the following month, the Governor General in Council may order a sale and the Board of Revenue may direct the whole estate of the defaulting zemindar to be sold. Where the monthly payments are fixed and ascertained, the Government does not forego the right of selling the zemindari if default should be made in paying these instalments, by taking a bond from sureties, by which the estates of the sureties also were rendered liable for the due payment. talook would have been put up for sale and sold under Act I of 1845, if S G., in order to save it from sale, had not borrowed and deposited the necessary amount to discharge this debt. On a decree having been obtained by S.G., against S.K , the rights and interests of the former under that decree had been transferred to the appellant. The question raised on this appeal was, whether the appellant was entitled to charge on the talook and to have it sold in its entirety to pay the amount of the money paid to the Government as revenue. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee were of opinion that what they had to decide was not whether such a charge originally existed or subsisted at present, but whether appellant could enforce such a charge in the present suit. The question was not whether one who pays the arrear of the rent does not acquire thereby a charge on the talook which he saves from sale, but whether, if he seek to enforce that right, he must not do so in a suit properly framed for that purpose and not merely in a suit confined to a personal remedy against the person in possession of the talook Their Lordships, held, concurring with the opinion of the High Court, that where the person who had paid the arrears sought re-payment only under s. 9, Act I of 1845, as against the person in possession of the talook having but a limited interest therein, and confined his suit to that object, the decree so obtained against the person in possession can only be made effectual against the property of that person, including such interest as she had in the talook Their Lordships wished it to be understood that the above ruling should not be taken to impair the general rule that in a suit brought by third person, the object of which is to recover or to charge an estate of which a Hindu widow is the proprietress, she could, as defendant, represent and protect the estate, as well in respect of her own as of the reversionary interest. The Collectorate credited the amount to the estate covered by the wrong number and brought to sale the estate in respect of which the money was remitted, the remitter having been lulled into a belief that the amount was properly credited by means of a receipt sent by the Collectorate. In a suit to set aside the sale, the defence relied on an endorsement on the back of the money-order that the remitter would be liable for any mistake and the Collectorate would be guided by the Towiz number mentioned in the money-order. Held, that, notwithstanding the existence of the endorsement on the money-order, the sale was liable to be set aside, as under R. 25 of the Land Revenue Rules, it was the duty of the Collectorate to draw the attention of the remitter to the mistake and give him an opportunity of rectifying it. The fact of the defaulter being a co-sharer in the property would not clothe him with any fiduciary character which would disqualify him from buying the property, unless it be for the benefit of all the co-sharers. Under s. 53, Act XI of 1859, a defaulting co-partner is at liberty to buy the estate in arrear. The right of a co-sharer to buy an estate at a revenue sale is not based upon any right or interest that is common to him and his co-sharers. (20)—Impeaching sale for arrears of revenue —Reg XI of 1822.—The right to impeach a sale of lands for arrears of Government revenue extends not only to the defaulting proprietor, but to derivative holders under him. By Ben. Reg. XI of 1822, s. 30, all under-leases are extinguished by a Government sale of the proprietor's land for arrears of revenue, and an auction-purchaser takes the lands clear of all under-tenures. At a sale by Government for arrears of revenue, the Government became purchasers, and afterwards granted a lease of the lands for a term of years, and put their lessees into possession. At the time of the sale, the lands were subject to an istimrary lease. No suit was instituted to reverse the sale, but the Government, some time afterwards, in consequence of doubts as to the legality of the sale, offered to give up their rights under the sale, and to restore the lands to the original proprietors subject to the recognition of the claims of their lessees. This offer resulted in an arrangement between the Government, the original proprietors, and the Government lessees, and, eventually, the original proprietors upheld the lease to the Government lessees to a part of the lands called the Jungle Mehal, for a term of years at a reduced rent. In a suit by the istimrary lessee for possession, held (reversing the decree of the Sudder Court), that by Ben. Reg. XI of 1822, s. 30, the istimrary lease was determined by the sale for Government arrears, and that the arrangement by which the lands were restored to the proprietors, subject to the rights of the Government lessees, was in the nature of a compromise, and not such an unconditional restoration as amounted to a reversal of the sale, and the consequent revival of the istimrary lease. Aliter, if a suit had been brought, and a decree of the Court made for the reversal of the sale. (22)—Sale for arrears of revenue, liability of, to be set aside notwithstanding lapse of time—Bona fide sale—Compensation awardable to purchaser.—Plaintiffs sued in the year 1821 to set aside a sale of a zemindari made in the year 1802 for arrears of revenue. The long delay in filing the suit, though forming matter for consideration with reference to the judicial discretion to be exercised by the Court, and the mode of exercising it, was admitted on the part of the appellant not to form an objection to the jurisdiction or a bar to relief in the case. The main question was whether the case fell within either of the predicaments enumerated in cl. 2 of s. 3 of the Reg. I of January 1821, under which the proceedings arose. For, if not, the Commissioners might well have been contended to be without authority in the matter. The Judicial Committee was of opinion that, without any undue extension of the wordings of the said Regulation, this case might be held to go within one of the predicaments described in the Act; the Committee however did not agree with the Sudder Commission in their conclusion that justice did not require the power of directing payment by the successful party to the party deprived of possession or the power conferred by cl. 2 of s. 4 to be exercised. They thus concurred in the conclusion that the sale was liable to be set aside irrespective of the great lapse of time, but were of opinion that both justice and policy required that each of the powers above mentioned should be called into account and thus ordered that in consideration of the bona fide character of the sale, the purchaser should be awarded compensation. (24)—Sale for arrears of revenue—Collector, incompetent to sell whole talook in one lot—Confirmation by Board of Revenue of unauthorised sale by Collector—Appropriation of surplus proceeds by defaulting proprietor, effect of.—The question was whether the sale of the whole talook in one lot for arrears of revenue which might have been paid off by the proceeds of some definite portion of the talook, was out of the scope of the authority of the Collector; for, if the Collector had no authority to sell the whole talook under the circumstances at the time of the sale, there could be no implied validation of the sale by the subsequent appropriation of the surplus proceeds by the defaulting proprietor. Also, any subsequent confirmation of the sale by the Board of Revenue cannot render valid the act of the Collector which he was not competent to do by the principles of the regulation and by the general rules or by specific authority from the Board of Revenue, which should have been conferred previous to the sale. On the contention that the irregularities, in the improper and unnecessary sale of the whole talook in one lot, in the form of the advertisement and the manner of the service, had been waived by the defaulting proprietor having appropriated the surplus proceeds to her own purposes, so as to deprive her of the claim to annul the sale on the ground of irregularities, their Lordships were of opinion that the proprietor's acquiescence on the belief that there was the authority of the Board of Revenue for the sale, cannot give legal efficacy to a sale altogether void on account of the absence of any such previous authority. In this case, the Court below, without entering into any investigation of the profits made by the purchaser, appellant, during his occupation of the estate, had assumed that he had re-imbursed himself of the purchase-money with interest out of the profits of the estate. Being of opinion that there was no ground upon which the Court could found such a decision, their Lordships directed that an account should be taken of the principal and interest due to the appellant in respect of the purchase-money already paid by him, and also of the net profits made by him out of the estate during his occupation, and that, upon payment to him by the respondent of what might be found due on taking such account, possession of the talook should be delivered to the proprietor. Further, because the appellant stood acquitted of any blame whatever in the transaction, their Lordships reversed the decrees of both the Courts below so far as they condemned the appellant in costs, and ordered that each party should bear his own costs in all the Courts. (25)—Act XI of 1859, s. 5—Scope—Attachment—Sale for arrears of revenue—Appointment of manager by Court—Effect on attachment.—Act XI of 1859 is to a great extent a remedial Act passed for the benefit of the subject, and in order to relax the stringency of former Statutes whereby the Crown was empowered to sell estates for non-payment of revenue. Where an estate or a share in an estate not severed for the purposes of revenue is under attachment by order of a Civil Court in execution of a decree, such estate or share cannot under s. 5, Act XI of 1859, be sold for arrears of revenue without the notice required by s. 5 of that Act. The words "arrears of estates under attachment by order of any judicial authority" apply to attachments in execution under the Civ. Pro. Code, 1859. The words are not limited to attachments by the revenue authorities. The words "arrears of estates under attachment" are not confined to estates the whole of which are under attachment. The section would apply even if a portion of an estate is not under attachment. (26)—Decree against defaulting proprietor, admissibility of, against purchaser at—Thak map, value of.—A suit was brought for the recovery of khas possession of certain lands. The plaintiffs alleged that the plaint lands originally formed part of a certain permanently settled mehal which was sold for arrears of revenue, that the purchaser of the mehal mortgaged the plaint lands to the plaintiffs, that the plaintiffs brought a suit upon the mortgage and, in execution of their mortgage decree, they purchased the plaint lands at the Court sale, and that, when they went to obtain delivery of possession of the lands, they were obstructed by the defendants. Hence the present suit. The second defendant was the real contesting defendant. The contention of this defendant was that the plaint lands did not belong to the mehal, which was sold for arrears of revenue, but to another estate, from the proprietor of which estate she traced her title. The defendant placed reliance upon a compromise-decree of 1863, which was passed in a litigation between the original proprietor referred to by her and another person. The plaintiffs relied upon a thak map prepared in 1859 and 1860. The decree of 1863 was passed in a suit brought to rectify the mistake alleged to be found in the thak map. The Subordinate Judge, who tried the case, holding that the decree of 1863 was relevant, binding and admissible as against the plaintiffs, dismissed the suit. privity between the parties. It is enough that the payment is made in order to protect an interest of the payer which would have been endangered or damaged or which he believed in good faith would have been damaged or endangered by the sale to prevent which the payment was made. Thus, where a lessee of one of the proprietors of an estate, paid arrears of revenue due by them, he was held entitled to sue his lessor's co-proprietors for their share of the revenue which he paid. The lower court had wrongly directed that the plaintiff should sue under Act X of 1859. But the High Court held that that Act was not applicable, the parties not standing in the position of landlord and tenant and the instalments claimed not being due as arrears of rent. Further, payments made by the plaintiff were not voluntary payments but necessary payments made in order to save the estate from sale. The whole five mouzahs of the estate would certainly have been sold, had not the plaintiff as mokurrureedar of the four mouzahs paid the Government revenue for his neighbour, the mokurrureedar of the fifth mouzah. Plaintiff had also appealed as respects a claim which he had made against the Zemindar in the suit for some excess payment made by plaintiff on account of the Government revenue of the four mouzahs which he held under the Zemindar. But the High Court concurring with the lower Court decided that plaintiff could not recover on the said account. It was his duty to pay the Government revenue according to his mokurruree lease. If he had paid more than he ought, he must bear the loss if it was a loss. But, under such circumstances the excess might be credited to the revenue of the following year. BUNWAREE KISHORE v. Subsequently, the present defendant obtained another decree against the said son of H L. and attached the house in execution. Plaintiff afterwards obtained a fresh attachment of the house in execution of his decree, and contention arose as to whether the house should be sold in satisfaction of the plaintiff's or the defendant's decree. It was sold in satisfaction of the latter's decree according to the order of the Munsiff and purchased at auction by the plaintiff, and the sale-proceeds made over to the defendant under the provisions of s. 270 of Act VIII of 1859. In the present suit, the plaintiff claimed to recover the sale price paid by him, from the defendant, on avoidance of the above orders, by establishment of his own superior right in virtue of his decree and the agreement filed with reference to it. The High Court concurred in the decision of the lower Courts that the plaintiff's first attachment had been removed by the Munsiff's order and could no more be pleaded as giving the plaintiff a right superior to that of the defendant. Also, the fact that the house was said to be hypothecated, by means of the petition filed, for the purpose of securing the judgment-debt under the plaintiff's decree, could not be treated as supporting the claim. The plaintiff might perhaps have enforced his lien on the house if he had let somebody else to buy it, and any one else so buying would have bought it subject to the lien of the plaintiff. As however, plaintiff chose to himself buy the house in auction with his lien upon it, his lien ceased to be of any use to him. GURSAHAI v. RAM DIAL, 7 N.W.P. 91.

The first Court held that the defendant was not liable but the appellate Court gave plaintiff a decree. On special appeal the High Court held that the plaintiff could not recover on any ground. He bought the estate subject to all liabilities under the law and subject to all the rights of the defendant under that law. The fact on which the lower appellate Court based its decree, even if it be correct, viz., that the greater part of the rents of an estate are paid in the Pous kist, could not give any claim under the Act to the purchaser of the estate to be reimbursed the revenue which he is obliged under the law to pay for the month of Pous. The defendant, while admitting execution of the ekrarnamah denied having received any consideration, and alleged that the purchase was made entirely with his own funds. Held (a) that there was nothing in Act XI of 1859, which made it illegal for a former proprietor or co-sharer to be a purchaser of his estate at a sale for arrears due on that estate ; (b) that the suit was substantially one to oust a certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of another person not the certified purchaser, and was barred by s. 36 of the Sale Law, and that no separate title was given to the plaintiff by the ekrarnamah so as to take the case out of the operation of that section ; (c) that even supposing that the ekrarnamah fully and unequivocally admitted payment of the money, that would not be conclusive evidence of payment against the defendant, and that further proof would have to be given. She was merely a sharer of a joint talook, whose share consisted of a specific portion of land. And, if she sought protection from a sale for arrears of revenue, she could have obtained it under s. 11 of Act XI of 1859. The property in question had been previously conveyed to the mother and, on application by the mother to the Collector for common registry of property as a shikmee talook, such registry was sanctioned and the defendant attempted to rely on the registration, contending that it was conclusive. The only ground on which a revenue sale can be set aside is, as appears from s. 25 of the Act, on the score of irregularity in conducting the sale; and then, the Commissioner, on a petition of appeal presented to him within 15 days of the sale, can set it aside. The terms of the petition, however, need not be limited to pointing out only irregularities. It may set forth any other cause for setting the sale aside; it may disclose a case of hardship or injustice where no irregularity in conducting the sale exists, for instance, that the sale has taken place where no arrear is actually due, and, under such circumstances, the Government, under the provisions of s. 26 of the Act, may set aside the sale. If the Commissioner will not interfere to set aside the sale, the party who considers himself aggrieved may bring an action in the Civil Court under s. 33 of the Act, and may ask to have it set aside on the score of irregularity, and the Court may set it aside on proof of the existence of such irregularity, and of substantial injury caused to the plaintiff by such irregularity. Such suit must be brought within one year from the date of the sale becoming final and conclusive as provided in s. 27 of the Act. If, therefore, no irregularity producing substantial injury is pleaded, a Civil Court cannot entertain an action to set aside a sale for arrears of revenue orother demands realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue. The only course thus open to a party who considers himself to be injured by the sale of his property, should the Commissioner under s. 25 or the Government under s. 26 refuse to interfere, is by a suit for damages, as provided for in the latter part of s. 33. And where the Officer conducting the sale—the Collector—so specifies the kists, that does not prevent the Court from inquiring into whether arrears existed in respect of those kists or not. An irregularity in the issue of notice is a ground for setting aside a sale made under Act XI of 1859, only when it is shown that the defaulter has sustained loss or damage by reason of such irregularity. a right as co-sharer, was sold at a revenue sale. Surplus sale-proceeds amounting to Rs. 35,000, after satisfying the arrears of revenue, were held in deposit by the Collector. Certain creditors of the defendant, in spite of his objections, attached his right, title and interest in the said sum of Rs. 35 000; and at the Court sale which followed, the plaintiff purchased the same for Rs. 8,000 which having been paid into Court, was distributed among the said attaching creditors. Defendant, thereupon, brought a suit for the cancellation of the original revenue sale and finally succeeded in getting the same cancelled. The said sum of Rs. 35,000 was returned to the purchasers at the revenue sale. Plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant for the recovery of Rs. 8,000 paid by them into Court and distributed to the attaching creditors. Held that the doctrine of Courts of equity—that a plaintiff who comes into Court to be relieved from his own act or the act of one whom he represents on equitable grounds must do equity and submit to those equitable conditions which the Court may deem fit to impose on its grant of relief—was not applicable to this case, because it was not the defendant that sought the aid of the Court, but he was sued as defendant, and the money sought to be recovered had not been paid under any contract of his, or in any transaction to which he was a consenting party, but under proceedings taken in invitum. Held, also, the plaintiffs, having with their eyes open, purchased the defendant's interest in the surplus sale-proceeds, subject to the contingency of his succeeding in a suit to set aside the revenue-sale, in which event that interest would become nil, they were not entitled to get back Rs. 8,000 which they had paid on account of the purchase. Held, also, that the payment made by the plaintiff was voluntary and that, though the defendant might have benefited by it, he was not legally bound to re-pay the money to the plaintiffs. The Chief Court did not accept the contention. It held that there was no warrant for the application of such a rule of limitation to the present case. Had the minors been the sole owners of the tenure, it would have been protected from revenue sale by s. 10 of Act I of 1845, but as they formed only a very small minority of the owners, their minority would not avail towards protecting their shares. to her by his not having sold the estate to the highest bidder. The lower Courts awarded her the full amount of her claim. It was objected on special appeal that, if any damage had been done to the plaintiff, the amount awarded was excessive and improper, and that no damages at all ought to have been awarded. The High Court held that the Collector committed a wrongful act by selling the property to the second highest instead of the first highest bidder. But it was the difference between these two bids that could be taken as the proper measure of the plaintiff's loss. The actual or probable value of the estate, if it could be arrived at dehors the bidding could afford no guide to the loss sustained by the plaintiff. MR. CORNELL v. MUSST. [F., 10 C.W.N. 137=2 C.L.J. 325; R., 21 C. 844.] The irregularity upon the ground of which the Civil Court has, under the provisions of s. 33 of Act XI of 1859, jurisdiction to set aside a revenue sale, is an irregularity of a specific nature, namely, that the sale has been made contrary to the provisions of the Act. But a sale made contrary to a practice which had grown up in the Collectorate of the District even if such a practice would amount to a custom, is not a sale made contrary to any of the provisions of the Act. Sale Laws that have been passed since the Perpetual Settlement has been to protect the public revenue by placing the purchaser of an estate sold for arrears of revenue in the position of the person who, at the time of the Decennial Settlement, engaged to pay the revenue then fixed. They, therefore, gave or sought to give the purchaser, the power of abrogating all engagements made by the defaulting zemindar or his predecessors since the settlement, whereby the zemindaree rents and profits, which were the security of Government for the payment of revenue, were diminished. A talookdar could not be dispossessed of his land at the will of the purchaser at the sale; he was at the most liable to pay the district rate for them, and could only be ejected from them if he finally declined to hold it at the enhanced rent. Under Reg. XI of 1822, the law respecting dependent talooks created subsequently to the Settlement was that "such talooks were liable to be wholly avoided and annulled at the option of the purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue, unless they fell within the class contemplated by s. 32 of the Regulation." (1)—Act XI of 1859, s. 5—Notification—Attachment.—A notification issued under s. 5, Act XI of 1859, does not operate as an attachment by the Civil Court. That notification is for the information of the debtor and of the public, that it may be known that an arrear or demand is due from the debtor, which will be received if paid on or before a fixed date. It is simply a public call on the debtor to pay his debt by a fixed date. NURKOO RAM v. RAMJOORAWUN SINGH, 9 W.R. 481.

(2)—Sale for arrears of revenue—Act XI of 1859, s. 6, non-compliance with, effect of.—A non-compliance with the provisions of s. 6 of Act XI of 1859, in respect of a sale for arrears of revenue, would avoid the sale altogether, and is not a mere irregularity or one of those errors in procedure, which are intended to be cured by s. 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868—Per Garth, C.J; Mitter, Prinsep and Pigot, JJ.—Where the date fixed in the sale notification is less than thirty clear days from the date of its being affixed in the Collector's office, there is a legal defect in the notification, such as cannot

(3)—Transfer of revenue jurisdiction—Payment of revenue.—If an estate is transferred from one Collectorate to another, the holder of the estate is not entitled to take credit for payment of rent to the Government treasury of the district to which the estate originally belonged, if he has notice of such transfer, unless he has got a regular transfer receipt; if he has no notice and pays and takes receipt, it is a sufficient quittance as against Government. THAKOOR CHURN ROY v. THE COLLECTOR OF THE 24 PERGUNNAHS, 13 W.R. 336.

(4)—Government revenue paid by one proprietor on behalf of co-proprietor in default—Putneedar of defaulter not liable to pay.—The respondent and the lessor of the appellant, a putneedar, were co-proprietors. To save the estate from sale on account of arrears of Government revenue, the respondent paid his share and his defaulting co-proprietor's share of the revenue, and the question had to be decided whether the sum paid by the respondent for his defaulting co-proprietor, could be recovered by the respondent from the appellant, the putneedar. Held that the putneedar could not be held liable to pay any such sum. The respondent could recover the money paid for his co-proprietor by separate action against him, but not from the putnidar having the right to all the profits of the putnee after payment of rent to his lessor. And, even if the putneedar had not paid rent to the lessor, that would be a question between him and his lessor which might give the latter a right of action against him, but could not render the putneedar responsible to the respondent. BYKUNTNATH ACHARJEE v. GOOROO CHURN BOSE, 7 W.R. 247.

(5)—Auction sale for arrears of revenue—Cancellation of under-tenures.—Where, at an auction sale for arrears of revenue, the Government becomes the purchaser of the property and afterwards makes settlements with the former proprietors of the under-tenures, the question whether or not the Government cancelled the under-tenures existing at the time of the sale, is one to be decided solely according to the effect of the proceedings taken by the Collector in each case. It is a mistake to suppose that their Lordships of the Privy Council

(6)—Sale of land for arrears of revenue—Fraudulent purchase by tenant in possession—Trustee for owner—Forfeiture of tenancy.—Suit for setting aside of revenue sale and for possession—Amendment of plaint.—Where a tenant who, as between him and the owner of the land, was bound to pay the land revenue to Government, either wilfully or negligently omitted to pay, and thereby occasioned a sale for arrears of revenue, and himself became the purchaser, he was in equity liable to be declared a trustee of the land so purchased for the owner thereof, discharged of his tenancy in consequence of his conduct which worked a forfeiture of any right to be continued as tenant. [R., 21 B. 396, 22 B. 271, 3 Bom. L.R. 92, 30 B. 466=8 Bom. L.R. 360; D., 12 B. 595.] Where, under the circumstances mentioned above, the owner brought a suit for the setting aside of the revenue sale and for possession, held that the plaint ought not to have contained any prayer for setting aside the sale, but that as it contained a prayer for possession, it might be read as praying (or at least that the plaintiff should be permitted to amend it so that it might simply pray) that the defendant should, under the circumstances alleged by the plaintiff, be declared a trustee of the land for the plaintiff. BALKRISHNA VASUDEV v. MADHAVRAV NARAYAN, 5 B. 73.

(7)—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879)—Revenue sale for arrears—Declaration of forfeiture by Collector, if essential to validity of sale.—A sale of a holding for default of payment of assessment is not to be deemed invalid, merely because, prior to the sale, there has been no declaration of forfeiture by the Collector. A declaration of forfeiture may be necessary for some purposes but it does not constitute so essentially a necessary preliminary of a sale, that a sale without it would be altogether illegal and invalid. The fact that a sale has taken place is itself strong prima facie evidence that forfeiture had been declared. There is nothing to prevent forfeiture being presumed to have taken place, whenever the Collector has proceeded to sell the occupancy, his right to do so being founded on the liability of the occupancy to forfeiture and sale. paras. 1 and 2 of s. 38 of Act II of 1864, to have a sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity in conducting or publishing it, is dismissed, the party aggrieved by such order can, under s. 59 of the Act, sue in a Civil Court for redress, and such right is not affected by the words "except as hereinafter provided" in para 3 of s. 38, since the words refer only to the case of a sale being set aside by the Collector suo motu. The plaintiff in a civil suit to set aside a revenue sale on the ground of material irregularity should also prove, as required by s. 38, that substantial injury has resulted from the irregularity. No direct evidence need be offered connecting the irregularity with the injury, if both are proved, for the relation of cause and effect may be inferred. But where the irregularity proved is non-publication of the notice of sale at the Collector's office, several miles distant from the place of sale, no such inference is possible. BOMMAYYA NAIDU v. (5)—Execution—Extent of interest passed by such sale—Contract—Right of the parties—Law governing the parties.—In the case of a sale in execution of a money decree the questions are what did the Court intend to sell, and what did the purchaser understand that he bought. (6)—Court-sale—What was intended to be sold and purchased—Question of mixed law and fact—State of law at time of sale—Evidentiary value—View of Privy Council—Effect—Weight to be attached.—The question what, at a Court sale, the Court intended to sell and what the purchaser understood that he bought is one of mixed law and fact. The state of the law as understood at the time of the sale is only a piece of evidence, to be considered with other evidence in the particular case, in determining what the Court intended to sell and what the purchaser understood he bought. (34 M. 188, 29 M. 484, 4 M. 1, R.) Though a prior judgment of the Privy Council may not operate as res judicata, yet the fact that, on a mixed question of fact and law, the Privy Council came to a conclusion, necessarily carries great weight. (8)—Sale of mauza consisting of two mahals —Mahal submerged at time of sale not mentioned in sale notification—Right of purchaser to submerged mahal.—The rights and interests of a judgment debtor in a mauza consisting of two mahals were sold in Court auction. At the time of the sale one of the mahals was covered with water. The submerged mahal was not mentioned in the sale notification. Subsequent to the sale the river having receded, the submerged mahal re-appeared. The auction-purchaser attempted to obtain possession of that mahal also. The judgment-debtor resisted on the ground that the submerged mahal did not pass by the sale. Held, that the proprietary rights of the judgment-debtor in the mauza were sold without limitation or restriction of any kind, and the mere fact of the mention in the sale notification of one mahal only did not affect what passed by the sale, since the other mahal was at the time submerged. The whole rights of the judgment-debtor in both the mahals passed to the purchaser, with the accessory and contingent right to any lands which might subsequently appear from the river's bed and accrete to such mahal. (13)—Execution against property of testator—Life interest in residue of testator's property, whether saleable under.—In this case the testator declared that his son G shall be his heir and executor for the purpose of executing his intentions. The son thereby became a trustee for the purpose of executing the different dispositions contained in that instrument. Those dispositions were to this effect. There was first a charge by way of an annuity of Rs. 1,200 in favour of the present appellant; all the debts were to be paid; there were very large legacies to be discharged; and after all these charges, debts, legacies and annuities had been satisfied or provided for, as to the remainder of the estate, G was to be tenant for life with remainder to his sons. He, therefore, was entitled to nothing for his own benefit but a life-interest in the residue of the real and personal property of the testator after all the charges upon it had been satisfied and provided for, and after a full administration had taken place of the assets for the purpose of discharging the said several dispositions; and such an interest was held to be one not liable to sale under an execution issued in the Supreme Court against the property of the testator. (16)—Execution of decree—Auction-sale of property both ancestral and self-acquired—Sanction of Government for sale of ancestral property—Sanction given after sale, sufficiency of.—Part of a share sought to be sold in execution of decree was the self-acquired property of the appellant, and the remainder, of his ancestral estate. The Commissioner, while forwarding the sale statement to the Local Government for sanction with respect to the ancestral state, remarked "...when sanction is accorded to the sale of the ancestral portion, I will sanction sale of the self-acquired portion." The sale statement was sanctioned by the Local Government and was sent direct to the Deputy Commissioner. Held, that the sale of the self-acquired share was never sanctioned by the Commissioner and the Government sanction was not sufficient. Held, further, that sanction given after the sale had taken place was not sufficient. Held also, that the sale of no part of the share could be upheld, as it was impossible to say which part of the share was sold first. The judgment-debtors may be in a position to file a suit to have the sale set aside, but that question cannot be decided in a suit between the auction-purchaser and strangers in possession. does not go beyond an honest belief in the purchaser in the validity of his title. (12 C.L. J. 391, 32 M. 530, 33 C. 1119, R.) The principle of caveat emptor is not applicable to the case of a purchaser at a Court sale. It is no doubt well settled that there is no covenant for title implied in a Court sale. But this means nothing more than that the auction-purchaser takes only the interest in the property sold, which his judgment-debtor had in law at the time of sale. The scope of the doctrine does not extend to the consequences of defects or irregularities in the proceedings leading up to the sale, which might render it void or voidable. S. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act is also inapplicable to a purchaser at a Court sale. The fact that an auction-purchaser had, prior to making improvements, notice of the application made by the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant to set aside the Court sale, does not disentitle him from claiming compensation for the improvements made by him. MATHUNSA ROWTHEN v. APSA BIN, 21 M.L J. 969=10 M.L.T. 373=12 Ind. Cas. 444.

(22)—Sale in execution of decree—Confirmation of sale—Title of auction-purchaser—Validity—Certificate of sale.—Where property has been sold in execution of a decree, it is not competent to a party to the suit in which the decree was passed or his representative in interest to dispute the title of the auction-purchaser at the sale after the confirmation of sale, although no certificate of sale had been obtained by the purchaser. The order confirming the sale would complete the title of the latter as against the former, and a certificate of sale is unnecessary. KHUSHAL PANACHAND v. (23)—Absence of certificate of sale, effect of, on title of purchase in execution sale.—The defendants in this case were the purchasers at an auction sale who, have been put in possession by Court in execution of a decree against the plaintiff's father, were held to be entitled to retain it as against the plaintiff notwithstanding their not having obtained the certificate of sale or not having got it registered. (24)—Execution of decree—Sale in execution—Purchaser not bound to inquire into validity of order of sale.—Where certain property was sold under a mortgage decree, and the sale was confirmed and possession given to the purchaser, the title of the purchaser would not be affected by the fact that the decree was one which the Court ought not to have made. It is not necessary for an intending purchaser at a sale under a decree to go behind the decree, to see Consequently a purchaser who buys at such a sale an avowedly doubtful title, pays for it on that understanding, and cannot claim to be a purchaser for value without notice. SOBHAGCHAND GULABCHAND v. In the case of a judicial sale, however, the purchaser at such a sale takes only that which the judgment debtor could honestly dispose of, and so a mortgage without possession which would be binding on the mortgagor himself would also be binding on the purchaser in execution of a decree obtained against the mortgagor. (30)—Execution—Sale—Property not comprised in the mortgage sold—Subsequent application for sale of property comprised in the mortgage cannot be allowed.—In 1897, the decree-holder applied for execution of his decree which he had obtained on foot of his mortgages. A portion of the property, which he sought to have sold, was not comprised in the mortgage. The Subordinate Judge so held it and set aside the sale. The decree-holder, however, got the decision of the Subordinate Judge set aside by the High Court. He subsequently made another application for execution and sought to have the portion really comprised in the mortgage sold, alleging that the part of the property which had been sold in 1897 was not comprised in the mortgage, and that he now proceeded against the real property and that he should not be prevented from putting it to sale: Held, that it was not, under the circumstances, equitable and just to allow the decree-holder to sell the property in dispute. subject to a mortgage sold it in consideration of the purchaser paying off the mortgage. The latter having failed to do so, the vendor brought a suit against him for damages for loss sustained by him in consequence of such non-payment, and obtained a decree. In execution of this decree he purchased, with the leave of the Court, the equity of redemption vested in the vendee. In further execution of the same decree for the balance still remaining due, the question arose as to the amount to which credit ought to be given by the decree holder purchaser in favour of the judgment-debtor. Held that, having obtained leave of the Court, the decree-holder must be considered to be in the position of an independent purchaser, and that the price which such a purchaser must be taken to pay when he buys property subject to a mortgage for cash payment made to the mortgagor on account of his right of redemption —namely, the actual cash paid plus the amount of the mortgage debt—was the amount to which credit should be given by the decree-holder. He is entitled to have his allegation of fraud fully investigated. (6 C.L.J. 62, F.) It cannot be affirmed as an inflexible rule of law that a combination among intending purchasers not to bid against each other cannot under any circumstances amount to fraud. (27 I.A. 17=23 M. 227, Expl.) All judicial sales of property should be free from undue influence, controlling or stifling competition and threat; but there is nothing to prevent persons from combining from honest motives to purchase property at such sales. (7 W. R. 81, R). There is a distinction between an honest combination among intending purchasers and a dishonest concert for the suppression of all competition. (1 C. L. perfected attachment is an essential preliminary to sales in execution of simple decrees for money; and where there has been no such attachment, any sale that may have taken place is not simply voidable, but ipso facto, void. the proceeding to the defendants, and the plaintiff subsequently brought a suit in the proper Court and obtained a decree for recovery of the property on setting aside the sale, and where, in execution of the decree for costs made in the infructuous proceedings, property was attached, sold and purchased by the decree holder: Held, that the suit to set aside the sale and to recover possession of the property was commenced by the Hindu widow as the representative of the estate of her husband and for the benefit thereof, and when, as in the present case, her claim was well founded on the merits, as the result of the trial before the competent Court subsequently manifested, the decree for costs in the preliminary proceeding must be taken to have been made against her as representative of the estate, and when in execution the property was brought to sale, it must be taken that not merely her limited interest but the entire inheritance passed to the auction-purchaser, the decree for costs being capable of execution against the estate of the husband in the hands of the widow. (6 C. 479, 23 C. 636, 7 C.W.N. 678, 8 C.W.N. 843, R.) The authority of the widow to throw the liability upon the estate in her hands cannot be taken to be more restricted than that of a shebait to charge debutter property under similar circumstances. (7 C.L.J. 514, R.) The law as to the liability of a trustee in such circumstances discussed. The position of a Hindu widow, so far as the present question is concerned, is not inferior to that of a trustee, for she represents the estate fully, and the only limitation upon her title is that she has a qualified right of alienation. In order to determine the exact interest which passes at a sale in execution of a decree against a Hindu widow or a qualified proprietor similarly situated, the test to be applied is whether the suit, in which the sale was directed, was brought against the widow upon a cause of action personal to herself or one which affected the whole inheritance of the property in suit. Where it appears that the decree against the widow is in respect of the husband's estate and binds the reversionary heirs, the purchaser of her right, title and interest in execution takes the estate absolutely. No inference can be drawn from the circumstance that the sale certificate describes the property sold as right, title and interest of the widow. (6 C.L.J. 490, 7 C. 357, 11 I.A. 66, R. and F.; 1 C. 183=2 I.A. 275, 12 C.W.N. 769, 30 A. 394, Expl. and D.) In the case of a mortgage suit, the lis continues after the decree nisi, and the doctrine of lis pendens is applicable to proceedings to realize the mortgage after the decree for sale. (2 C.L.J. 288, R. and F.) A purchaser of immoveable property at an auction sale can establish his title by evidence independently of the sale certificate, as a sale certificate does not create title, but is merely evidence of title. BRAJA NATH PAL v. (50)—Execution — Sale of the property—Rights of the auction-purchaser—Lis pendens—Application of the doctrine to purchasers buying in execution under decree of the very suit in which the decree is passed—Appeal from the decree—Sale under the decree—Stay of the sale.—A sale in execution of a money decree is not affected by the subsequent reversal of the decree. A purchaser has a right to presume that the Court has taken the steps necessary to investigate the rights of the parties; and that it has on that investigation properly decreed a sale. He has no right to call upon the Court to protect him for a title not in issue in the cause, and no way affected by the decree, but if he gets a proper conveyance of the estate, so that no person whom the decree affects can invalidate the title, although the decree may be erroneous and therefore to be invalidated, the title of the purchaser ought not to be invalidated. Where an appeal is presented from a decree directing a sale of property in dispute in a suit, then the only course is to take such steps as will secure that by stay or otherwise no detriment shall be suffered by the appellant in case the appeal succeeds. Ordinarily, no greater interest passes on the realization by sale of a mortgage security than is comprised in the mortgage, for apart from special circumstances, a man cannot pass more than he has. The Court will not ordinarily disturb a purchaser under a Court's order or decree in favour of a person bound thereby. SHIVLAL v. SHAMBHUPRASAD, 7 Bom. L.R. 585=29 B. 433.

MANIK SINGH v. PARAS RAM, 1 A. 727.

(57)—Execution of decree—Attachment of property in execution of decrees of two Courts—Postponement of sale by Court of higher grade—Sale of property by Court of lower grade—Invalidity of sale—Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, ss. 295, 311.—When several decrees of different Courts are out against a judgment-debtor, and his immoveable property has been attached in pursuance of them, the law contemplates, no matter whether such Courts be of the same or different grades, that one Court and one Court only, shall have the power of deciding objections to the attachment, of determining claims made to the property, of ordering the sale thereof, and receiving the proceeds, and of providing for the distribution under s. 295. Where the Courts are of different grades, the one upon which this duty devolves is that of the highest grade ; where they are of the same grade, that which first effectuated the attachment. Where, therefore, the immoveable property of a judgment-debtor was attached in execution of decrees passed by a Subordinate Judge and a District Munsif, and the Subordinate Judge postponed the sale of such property, but the Munsif refused such postponement and ordered the sale of the property, held, that the sale of the property was void as having been made in pursuance of the order of a Court which had no jurisdiction to pass such order. In the Matter of the Petition of BADRI PRASAD v. (58)—Sale under Acts VIII of 1859, and X of 1877—Sale in execution of decree enforcing lien.—Under Act X of 1877, what is sold in execution of a decree purports to be some specific property ; whereas, under Act VIII of 1859, what was sold in execution was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the "property sold." Similarly, while a sale certificate under the Act of 1859 declared that the purchaser had purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property sold, a certificate under the Act of 1877, mentions the property sold and the name of the person, who, at the time of sale, declared to be the purchaser. [R., 3 Bom. In execution of certain decrees againt the Zemindar, his right, title and interest in the villages were sold. The price fetched was very inadequate as compared with the value of the villages. On the death of the Zemindar, the lease having expired by that time, the purchaser sued to recover possession of the villages. Held that, considering the law as it stood at the time of sale and the (61)—Decree against father—Extent of right of purchaser in execution—Son's share when passes.—In this case, the Subordinate Judge held that the purchaser at the sale in execution of a decree, obtained against the father of the plaintiffs, got not only the right, title and interest of the father, but that the share of one of the two sons, the plaintiffs, also passed by the sale, as he had been made a party to the suit and proceedings in execution after his father's death as his legal representative. On appeal by the defendants, the District Judge rejected the plaintiffs' plaint. The High Court, without expressing any opinion on the Subordinate Judge's view as to the liability of one of the sons, reversed the decree of the District Judge, holding that what the execution-purchaser really bought was only the right, title and interest of the appellant's father in the property in dispute, namely, his share in it. He got his title to the property sold by reason of the authority given by law to the Court to sell it to him. SADASHEO BALKRISHNA v. KRISHNA RAO DEORUS, 2 C.P.L.R. 9.

(67)—Attachment—Execution sale of one property—Non-payment of purchase-money—Right to sell other properties.—In execution of a decree for Rs. 148, several properties belonging to the judgment-debtor were attached and put up for sale. At the sale, the first of these properties was knocked down to a bidder for Rs. 154, and that being sufficient to satisfy the debt, the sale proceeded no further. The purchaser having failed to pay the purchase-money, the sale was not completed, and the decree-holder subsequently applied that this and other properties of the judgment-debtor which had been attached should be put up for sale. The Munsif ordered the sale to proceed, and also directed the debtor to proceed against the former purchaser, if the property fetched a less price than it did at the former sale. At the second sale, the property which was sold at the previous sale was knocked down to the decree-holder for Rs. 74 and other property of the judgment-debtor was also sold. The District Judge on appeal set aside that part of the Munsiff's order which directed the debtor to realise the difference from the defaulting purchaser and directed the Munsiff not to confirm the sale of the properties other than the property originally sold. Held that, so far as the judgment of the Judge set aside that part of the Munsiff's order which related to the defaulting purchaser, he was right as the defaulting purchaser was not before the Court. Held also that the judgment-creditor was not debarred in consequence of what took place at the former sale from proceeding upon his decree against any property of the judgment-debtor other than that which was originally sold. The purchaser had an equal opportunity with the decree-holder of ascertaining the extent of the judgment-debtor's interests. sold, but the sale proclamation described the property in one place as that of the widow and in another as that of the widow's husband or as the rights and interests of the debtor. Held by the majority that the property advertised for sale and sold was that of the widow as her husband's representative but not that of the widow personally. (2)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 203—Decree against legal representatives—Execution sale—Personal decree—Construction.—Where property is described at the time of sale as the property of judgment-debtors who are sued as mere representatives of a deceased debtor, prima facie what is sold is the property of the deceased debtor. Although the decree is in terms as if it were a personal decree, and although it does not follow the terms of s. 203, Act VIII of 1859, yet it is the same thing as if the decree had stated that it was for the debt of the deceased. [D., 21 W.R. 93, 24 W.R. 3.] Parties who are present at a sale are not bound to refer to the decree and cannot be considered as knowing its contents, unless they are stated in the notification of sale. The proclamation and notification under s. 249 of Act VIII of 1859 are intended to inform persons what is to be sold, and to give the names of the parties whose rights and interests in it are to be sold. A guardian has no right or interest in the minor's property; he represents the minor for the purpose of defending suits, and he manages the property for the minor, but that is not having a right or interest in it which can be sold. The Courts ought to be extremely careful with regard to allowing the property of minors to be sold in execution of decree. In a sale in execution against the representative of a deceased person, the description of the property to be sold should contain the name of defendant, and should say "the right, title, and interest of the defendant as representative of the deceased." Where the property of a minor is not described as such, the purchaser at a sale in execution

(4)—Property sold as right and interest of widow—Property wrongly described—Right of deceased debtor—Purchaser, Right acquired by.—Where in execution of a decree in the presence of the widows of the original debtor, the property in dispute was sold as the right and interest of the widows. Held that the auction-purchaser, under the circumstances of the case, acquired by the purchase the right and interest of the original debtor in the property, though in the sale notification those of the widows were advertised to be sold. TARA KANT BHUTTACHARJEE v. LUKHEE DABEEA AND WISE, 2 Hay 8.

(5)—Representatives of deceased Mahomedan—Sale subject to mortgage—Power of heirs to alienate.—The heirs of a deceased Mahomedan mortgaged some property of their ancestor. After the mortgage, a judgment-creditor, in respect of a debt due from the estate of their ancestor, attached and sold the mortgaged property in execution of his decree. Held that the sale was subject to the mortgage. Held also that the question with respect to the powers of the heirs and the rights acquired by the mortgagee and the purchaser under the execution, in a suit between the latter, was to be determined, not by Mahomedan law, but by the principles of "justice, equity and good conscience." Semble.—That even if the Mahomedan law applied, the sale in execution would be subject to the mortgage. CAMPBELL v. DELANEY, Marsh 509.

(6)—Mahomedan Law—Decree against one heir of deceased Mahomedan—Effect on other heirs Parties—Mortgage—suit—Sale—Right of heir not made party to recover her share—Limitation.—Under Mahomedan Law, a decree by consent against one heir of a deceased debtor cannot legally bind the other heirs (2 C.L.R. 223, F.B., F.) A Mahomedan, after having executed a mortgage of his property in favour of A, died leaving behind him a widow, a daughter and a sister. A sued upon his mortgage against the widow and the daughter alone, without making the sister a party to the suit, and a compromise decree was passed, in execution of which the right, title and interest of the mortgagor was purchased by B, the defendant. C, who had purchased from the sister her six annas share in the property, sued to recover the same from the purchaser B, without making the original mortgagee A, a party. Held that (a) the original mortgagee was not a necessary party, inasmuch as the question whether the sister's share of the property could be affected by proceedings to which she was not a party, was distinct from the question whether the original mortgagee could, by a suit properly instituted for the purpose, make that share liable for a proportion of a debt secured by the mortgage of the whole property ; (b) the contention of the defendant that the original mortgagee having conveyed to the defendant benefit of his own lien, the plaintiff was bound to pay him the mortgage-debt before he could recover possession, was not good, inasmuch as the sister was no party to the mortgage suit, the fact of sale in execution of the decree obtained in that suit could not affect her six annas share so as to convey to the purchaser any interest either of the mortgagor or of the mortgagee ; (c) the share of the sister was not affected by the sale although what the defendant purchased was the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover a six annas share ; (d) the suit was not barred by limitation, even though it was not instituted within one year from the date of the execution sale. SITANATH DAS v. ROY LUCHMEPUT SINGH, 11 C.L.R. 268.

(7) — Hindu Law — Separated members — Legal representative—Execution sale—Bonafide purchaser for value—Question whether defendant is legal representative of deceased.—So long as no legal administrator has been appointed, the childless widow of a separated Hindu is the only person who can defend a suit as his representative ; and while a decree obtained against a widow will enable the creditor to attach and sell not only the widow's life-estate in the immoveable property, but also the reversionary estate of the remainderman, yet a decree obtained against the remainderman will not enable the creditor to touch the estate in the hands of the widow. [R., 1 B. 577, 11 B. 119.] A bona fide purchaser should not, as a general rule, lose the benefit of his purchase by any irregularity of the proceedings in a case. This rule applies when the person whose property is sold has been a party to the suit (even though he may have been ignorant of the suit until after the sale). The purchaser is bound to satisfy himself that the party sued as the representative of the deceased person was really h legal representative, or that, if it turns out be otherwise, the purchaser is entitled to be protected. [R., 21 B. 424, F.B.] Although when a decree has been obtained against A in his life-time and A dies before execution, A's estate is properly described in the proceedings in execution as the estate of A, and in the certificate of sale, the purchaser is properly described to have purchased the right, title, and interest of A in the property sold, this procedure is improper in cases in which the debtor dies before or pending the suit, and the suit is brought or continued against his representative. In such a case, the representative and not the deceased person is the defendant, and in the notification and certificate of sale, it ought to be set forth that what is sold is the right, title and interest of the representative on the record and not of the deceased person.

Where the legal representative of a deceased person, knowingly allowed another to defend the suit brought against the estate, or knowing of a sale in execution of a decree brought against the mother as legal representative, took no measures to prevent the sale, he will be bound by the execution sale. If he did not knowingly allow the other to defend the suit or did not know of the sale, then the decree-holder should have given an opportunity of proving as against him, that the debt for which the decree was passed was really due. (1)—Notification of sale—Sale certificate—Sale under Beng. Act VIII of 1859, s. 249, in execution of decree for arrears of rent.—Where, on an execution-sale, there is a discrepancy between the conditions in the notification of what is to be sold and the certificate of what has been sold, the conditions in the notification are to be taken as of superior authority in dealing with the conflicting claims of innocent third parties whose rights are affected by the variation. In execution of a decree for arrears of rent, an application was made for a sale of the tenure for the arrears of which the decree had been obtained. A notification was issued purporting to be a sale proclamation under Act VIII of 1859, s. 249, and, in pursuance of that notification, the sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor took place. Held that the tenure did not pass by that sale notwithstanding that the sale-certificate stated it was the tenure itself which had been sold. Right to compensation.—Where, in a suit by an auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree obtained outside the jurisdiction of the original side of the High Court, against the decree-holder, for refund of a portion of the purchase-money by reason of a deficiency in the quantity of the land actually sold, as compared with the area stated in the sale proclamation, and also for abatement of rent in respect of such deficiency of area, the plaintiff had failed to make out, that he had sustained loss by misdescription in the sale proclamation, and where the purchase-money was not in Court and the decree-holder's offer to pay back the purchase-money and to release the auction-purchaser from his purchase had been refused, held, that the auction-purchaser was not entitled to compensation, but was entitled to an abatement of rent for such deficiency. (1 C.W.N. 106, D.) In order to enable the auction-purchaser in the above case to successfully claim compensation, it is not essential for him to make out a case of fraud against the decree-holder. Per Maclean, C.J. (18 A. 822, Diss.) The considerations on which the right of a purchaser at a private sale rests, to recover from the vendor, compensation for the deficiency in the area of the property sold, differ from those on which a purchaser at an execution sale can claim such compensation. The price paid by the purchaser at an execution sale is determined not by contract but by competition. DOYAL KRISHNA NASKAR v. AMRITA LAL DAS, 29 C. 370.

(4)—Misdescription of property in sale notification—Purchaser's remedy.—If the misdescription of the property in the sale notification goes to the essence of the contract and materially alters the substance of it, the purchase cannot be enforced upon the purchaser. But if such misdescription does not materially alter the substance of the contract, the remedy which the purchaser can claim is adequate compensation and not annulment of sale. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL v. AGORE NATH MOOKERJEE, 29 C. 420=6 C. W.N. 873.

(5)—Execution sale—Misdescription of property sold—Cancelment of sale.—Where there is substantial error as to the subject-matter of sale, that sale cannot be repaired and made efficacious by a subsequent investigation as to the nature of the property sold irrespectively of the terms of the sale. The question must be what the purchaser had a right to consider as sold to him according to those terms. If the Court cannot decide this, or is satisfied that there was error as to the substantial subject of the sale, the proper course is to cancel the sale. JOWREE MULL v. T.C. FENWICK, 89 P.R. 1868.

(6)—Court-sale—Sale of tenure as jote jumma —Purchase by person knowing unreal character of tenure—Subsequent sale of same property as shamilat talook—Second sale by real name—Right of first purchaser as against subsequent purchaser. — Where a tenure styled a jote jumma was sold and purchased by a person who had knowledge of its unreal character, and the same property was subsequently brought to sale by the decree-holder by its real name, shamilat talook, and purchased by another person, the right of the former could not prevail as against the latter inasmuch as he was not an innocent purchaser for valuable consideration, but a purely speculative purchaser, having knowledge that a tenure by the name of jote jumma had no real existence. BABOO HURONATH ROY v. MOTHOORANATH ACHARJEE, 7 W.R. 4.

——d.—JOINT PRORERTY, SALE OF.

(1)—Sale of joint propety as if separate—Effect of sale—Right taken by purchaser.—Under a sale in execution of a decree no property can be sold except that which belongs to the defendants in the suit. Accordingly, if under a decree in a suit against A alone, for a debt for which B is jointly liable, an estate be sold in which B is entitled to an equal share with A, the interests of A alone is acquired by the purchaser. KISHEN CHUNDER GHOSE v. MT. ASHOORUN, Marsh 647. See also, SREE PERSHAD SURMAH BHUTTACHARJEE v. SHUROOPA DOSSIA, 9 W.R. 452.

(2)—Joint right—Whether sale in execution of decree affects it.—A joint right is affected by a sale in execution of a decree, though not by a private sale without necessity. A voluntary private sale by a joint co-sharer without the consent of his fellows is inoperative. OODHUN MISSER v. HOOBDAR SINGH, 1 N.W.P. 271.

(3)—Joint family property—Purchaser of interests of member.—The purchaser of the rights and interests of one member in joint family property obtains no more than that member's share in the property. SREEPERSHAD SURMAH BHUTTACHARJEE v. SHUROOPA DOSSIA, 9 W.R. 452. [D., 25 W.R. 532.]

(4)—Joint Hindu family consisting of father and sons—Decree against father—Sale of "right, title and interest" of father in family lands—Evidence — Service vatan lands—Fraud.—Certain money-decrees were passed against R who lived with his sons as a member of an undivided Hindu family. The decree-holders took out execution, and the suit lands were sold to various persons, from whom the defendant purchased them. After the death of R, his sons and grandsons instituted the present suit to recover the lands in dispute from the defendant. The plaintiffs contended (1) that the lands in dispute being service vatan lands were inalienable, (2) that the sales in execution passed only the life interest of R, and that, on the death of R, they became entitled to the suit lands, (3) that even, if it be found by the Court that the lands were not service vatan lands, they were ancestral property, and the execution sales could not affect their interest therein, they not having been made parties to the suits in which the decrees had been passed against R, and (4) that the decrees against R had been fraudulently obtained. On the evidence in the case, it was held (1) that, although the sale proclamation and the sale certificates related only to the "right, title, and interest" of R as being offered for sale and purchased by the auction-purchaser, the entire family interest in the property was, as a fact, the subject of the auction sale in execution, (2) that only two fields (among the suit lands) were service vatan lands and that they remained inalienable vatan lands, although the services as regards those lands had been dispensed with. The words "right, title and interest" of the judgment-debtor are ambiguous words, which may either mean the share which he would have obtained on partition, or the amount which he might have sold to satisfy his debt, and it is in each case a mixed question of law and fact to determine what the Court intended to sell and what the purchasers expected to buy. APPAJI BAPUJI v. KESHAV SHAMRAV; KESHAV SHAMRAV v. APPAJI BAPUJI, 15 B. 13. [R., 21 B. 616, 3 Bom. L.R. 322.]

(5)—Hindu Law—Joint family—Father's debt—"Necessity"—Execution sale—Right of sons to set aside sale.—The father in an undivided Hindu family under the Mitakshara law has no interest that can form the subject of a sale beyond his share of the proceeds. Until partition is effected, he has merely a life-interest in a common property, which interest he can neither give away nor sell. The decree under which the estate in this case was put up for sale was one made on a debt which was not incurred for any necessity. The sons sued to set aside the sale. The purchaser contended that a portion of the sale-money was applied to pay off a decree on a debt which was admittedly incurred by the father for necessity and so the sale was not liable to be set aside. Held that, as the sale was in execution of a decree made on a debt which was not a necessity, it was not valid and must be set aside. But in such a case, however, the sons suing for annulment of the sale are in equity bound to pay the purchaser so much of the debt as would have been a burden on the estate. BHYRO PERSHAD v. BASISTO NARAIN PANDEY, 16 W.R. 31. [R. 22 W.R. 214.]

(6)—Ancestral property, sale of, in execution of decree for father's debt—Son's interest when passes by sale—Nature of debt, not of property, to be considered.—Where the rights and interests of a Hindu father have been put up and sold under a decree for debts incurred by him and not alleged to be incurred for an immoral purpose, the interests of the sons as well as the interest of the father in the property, although it was ancestral, are liable for the payment of the father's debts, and a purchaser under execution of a decree against the father is not bound, for the security of his title, to go behind the decree itself. When the purchaser has taken care to see that there was a decree against the father, and that the property was liable to process and sale in satisfaction of the decree, and has purchased the property bona fide under the execution, for valuable consideration, the sons cannot come in and set aside all that has been done under the decree and execution and recover back the property from the purchaser. It has often been laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, that, in such a case as the present, the nature of the debt, and not the nature of the estate, is to be considered, and, further, that, unless it can be shown that the debt was contracted for an immoral purpose, the question as to the nature of the debt must be held to be determined against the sons' claim by there having been a decree against the father and his rights and interest in the family property. PANDIT HAIT RAM v. MUSSAMAT MULU, 7 N.W.P. 110.

(7)—Joint family—Mortgage by father—Discharge of antecedent debt—Court sale—Right, title and interest of judgment-debtor.—The father of a Mitaksbara joint family mortgaged a certain mouzah, a portion of the joint family property, in order to discharge an antecedent debt. In execution of the decree obtained on the mortgage, "the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor," as set out in the proclamation of sale, was sold. Held that the mortgagor must be taken to have mortgaged the entire interest of the family, and the whole interest must be taken to have passed under the execution sale to the purchaser. E. J. C. STUDD v. BRIJ NUNDUN PERSHAD SINGH, 9 C.L.R. 350.

(7-a)—Hindu Law—Co-sharer's interest in joint ancestral property—Liability to sale in execution of decree—Purchase of share of house by widow—Her power of disposal over her husband's property.—The share and interest of one co-sharer in joint ancestral property may be sold in execution to satisfy a decree obtained against him personally, even if he be incompetent to make a valid alienation of his share voluntarily. [R., 113 P.R. 1886.] A Hindu widow, though entitled to the absolute and uncontrolled possession of the moveable estate of her husband, and to the full enjoyment or the usufruct thereof, may not waste the corpus and, if she converts it into immoveable property she may not dispose of such property otherwise than she might have disposed of it if it had descended to her in that form from her husband. DHANPAT v. HAKU, 58 P.R. F.B. 1880.

(8)—Co-sharer paying Government revenue in respect of another share—Decree obtained against such other sharer only—Sale of share in execution—Right of other sharers not affected.—A two anna's share in a Talook was recorded in the name of one D.N. of which share the plaintiffs, in the present case, who were the widows of the brother and nephew of D.N., were entitled to a three-fourth's share. N.K., a co-sharer in the same talook paid the Government revenue in respect of the entire share and sued D.N., for the amount and obtained a decree against him. Plaintiffs instituted the present suit against the purchaser of the entire share at the sale in execution of the above decree and obtained a decree for their portions of the share. On second appeal, it was urged that the debt being one for the benefit of the family of which the plaintiffs were also members, their shares were bound by the sale under the decree against D.N. This contention was not accepted by the High Court which held that though N.K. might have instituted his suit against all the parties interested in the entire share, yet, he having failed to include the widows as co-defendants, the purchaser under the decree was not in a position to say that their interests were affected by a decree to which they were no parties or by a sale which did not profess to bind their interests. SATH BATHEE DOSSEE v. MUTHUNGEENEE DOSSEE, 2 W.R. 38.

(9)—Execution sale—Partnership property—Decree against one partner—Partial partition—Proper remedy.—In a suit brought against one of the partners of a firm as manager of that firm against the firm itself, a decree was passed in terms of the plaint. There was no specification in the suit of the names of the partners of the firm. In execution of the decree so obtained, the right, title, and interest of the manager named in the decree, in a stable belonging to the firm, was sold, and the plaintiff purchased it. He then sued the other partners of the firm to recover possession of the stable. Held, that the plaintiff was in no better position than the purchaser at a sale of partnership property, made in execution of a decree against a single partner, and that he cannot be allowed to effect a partial partition, which the judgment-debtor, to whose right he succeeds, would not have been entitled to obtain. All that he can do is to bring a suit for an account and settlement of the partnership concerns and thus entitle himself to that interest in the property which, upon a final settlement, may be ascertained to belong to (10)—Decree for personal debts — Execution against property devolving on judgment-debtor.—A decree-holder is entitled to execute his decree against any property devolving on the judgment-debtor before the decree has been fully executed, and this without reference to whether the property was hypothecated to him; and the denial of the judgment debtor that he is interested in the property, which it is sought to make subject to execution, can have no effect. Property to which the judgment-debtor succeeded on the death of his brother's widow will be liable to satisfy the decree against him to the same extent to which in ordinary cases immoveable property of a Hindu having sons is liable. BULDEO SINGH v. DWARKA DASS, 1 Agra 169.

(11)—Sale-deed—Interests conveyed.—Where property belonging to three brothers was sold by two of them and no mention was made in the sale-deed of the interests of the other brother, a minor whose guardians they were, held that, the minor's interests were not affected, and the fact that the sale was made in consequence of execution proceedings taken in respect of an ancestral debt made no difference. NETYE ROY v. ODEET ROY, 10 W.R. 241.

(12)—Right of purchaser—Sale of reversionary interest.—A, a Hindu, was possessed of an undivided moiety in certain property, and was also entitled to a reversionary interest in the other undivided moiety contingent on his surviving his mother. In a suit against A, the Sheriff, under a writ of fi. fa., seized and sold to B the right, title, and interest of A in the premises. In an ex parte suit by B, asking for a declaration that he was entitled to the contingent reversionary interest of A, as well as to his present possessory right, Macpherson, J., gave a decree for the present possessory right, but refused to make any decree as to the contingent reversionary interest of A. (13)—Act VIII of 1835 — Tenure inherited by widow—Sale for arrears—Purchaser's rights.—The purchaser of a tenure inherited by a Hindu widow from her deceased husband and sold for arrears of rent under Act VIII of 1835 does not acquire merely her personal rights nor do his rights cease at her death. (2)—Execution-sale—Property subject to encumbrance—Rights of purchaser.—If there are legal encumbrances upon a property at the time when it is sold in execution of a decree, the sale can only take place subject to those encumbrances, and the purchaser can recover possession of the property only on paying off those encumbrances. GOLUCK MONEE DEBIA v. MAHOMED ENOOS, 24 W.R. 348.

(3) — Decree based upon sham mortgage — Right of innocent purchaser.—A decree based upon a colorable mortgage did not affect the right of a subsequent bona fide purchaser for value of the property mortgaged. What was bought by the purchaser was the real interest of the judgment-debtor in the property, and not his interest as diminished by a fictitious derogation arising out of a sham transaction. (5)—Mortgage decree—Execution — Sale of other property of judgment-debtor.—In a suit to recover certain monies which were secured by a mortgage of landed property, the decree ordered that property to be sold in satisfaction. Held that the decree-holder must carry out the terms of the decree, and first bring to sale the property covered by the mortgage, before he can sell any other property belonging to the judgment-debtor. As a decree-holder is entitled to have these rights brought to sale, a sale of such rights by the Civil Court by virtue of a certificate issued under s. 20, Act XI of 1865, is valid. BUDDOO MULL v. (8)—English mortgage containing power of sale to mortgagee—Right of mortgagee to sell without mortgagor's consent—Sale not affected by prior attachment by third party—Act VIII of 1859, s. 240.—The question in this case was as to the effect of a mortgage deed with a power of sale as regards the right of the mortgagee to sell with or without the consent of the mortgagor afterwards obtained. A house was mortgaged to the Simla Bank, the mortgage deed having been drawn up in the English form with a power of sale contained in the agreement that, in case of default in payment of the monthly instalments by the mortgagor, the mortgagee bank might sell the premises without any consent obtained from the mortgagor. Held that the effect of such a power of sale in a mortgage in the English form and between parties acting, as the present parties were, according to English Law, was to give the mortgagee complete power of sale whenever he may choose to exercise it, without further reference to the mortgagor. And the validity of a sale effected in the exercise of such power could not be affected by an attachment of the property by a third party—whether such attachment was made before or after the default on the part of the mortgagor entitled the mortgagee to exercise the power of sale. (9)—Mortgage by one co-sharer— Decree—Sale—Subsequent sale by all co-sharers—Right, title and interest of judgment-debtor—Right of subsequent purchaser.—Certain property was mortgaged by one of the several co sharers. The mortgagee got a decree for sale on his mortgage, and, in execution, the property was sold to the defendant. In the meanwhile all the co-sharers including the debtor sold the same mortgaged property to the plaintiff. Now the plaintiff sued to set aside the execution sale. Held, that the defendant purchased only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. The other co-sharers whose rights had not been affected by the execution sale could sell their rights to the plaintiff and the defendant was not entitled to retain possession of those shares. (10)—Mortgage decree — Sale of decree in execution—Purchaser if entitled to set aside pottah previously granted by mortgagor—Encumbrances.— The purchaser of property in execution of a decree in favour of a mortgagee sued to set aside a ticca pottah granted by the mortgagor as being prejudicial to his rights. But it was found that his rights were not in existence when the ticca was granted. Held that the purchaser could not claim to set aside the pottah. It was also contended that the plaintiff having purchased the property under the decree in favour of the mortgagee took it free from all alienations or incumbrances created subsequently to the mortgage. Held, that the contention was not maintainable if the term "incumbrance" be taken to include temporary arrangements by way of lease or farm which the owner might have found to be expedient or convenient. The mortgagor is restrained from alienating the property which he has pledged, but he is not divested of or restricted in the management of the property: and as long as nothing takes place which impairs the value or impedes the operation of the mortgagee's lien, the mortgagor, in creating a temporary lease, acts within his powers, and the purchaser has no legitimate cause of complaint. BANEE PERSHAD v. REET BHUNJAN SINGH, 10 W.R. 325.

(11)—Mortgage—Sale of property subject to mortgage—Purchaser's rights.—The purchaser of a mortgagor's rights and interests in property already mortgaged and liable to sale in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt, purchases merely the mortgagor's right to redeem. LALLA JOAGUL KISHORE LALL v. BHUKA CHOWDHRY, 9 W.R. 243. [F., 10 C. 567.]

(12) — Rights of mortgagee.— A mortgage made by way of security for money advanced remains a mortgage until the debt is satisfied, and the mortgagee (creditor) has every right to sue to obtain a decree, and sell that which is held by him as security for his money, without any regard to the proceeding of any other subsequent mortgagee or purchaser. A purchaser at a sale in execution of such a decree under a prior mortgage, as well as the original holder of a prior mortgage, have rights far superior to those of any other mortgagee or purchaser of a subsequent date. A subsequent purchaser, by payment of an earlier mortgage, and obtaining a decree for the money so paid, does not acquire any right belonging to that mortgage. His payment was a voluntary act, and his decree against his vendor was a personal one for a simple debt not secured by any security connected with any portion of the land in dispute. DHOREE ROY v. a mortgagee sues upon his mortgage bond, the Court should pass a decree for satisfaction of the claim from out of the property mortgaged and not from the right, title and interest, which remained in the mortgagor. A sale in execution of a decree under the mortgage passed all the interest which passed by the mortgage to the mortgagee and any interest which remained in the mortgagor. Where there has been a second mortgage, all that passes under that is the interest that remained in the mortgagor after the first mortgage had been made, i.e., the equity of redemption. In a suit brought on the second mortgage, the mortgagee will only be entitled to a decree for sale of the equity of redemption, unless the first mortgagee has been made a party to the suit and his mortgage has been declared invalid as against the second mortgagee. (14)—Mortgage—Prior mortgages—Purchase of mortgaged property—Rights of purchaser—First mortgage—Second mortgagee purchaser—Rights of latter.—What the purchaser of the rights and interests of the mortgagor in property subject to two prior mortgages takes, is only the right to redeem; and, where he purchases with full notice, he can retain possession only on paying off both the mortgages. Where there were two mortgages on certain property, and the second mortgagee, in execution of a decree obtained on his mortgage, purchased the mortgaged property, held that he purchased not merely the equity of redemption, but also the mortgagor's rights and interests as they were when the second mortgage was created subject to the first mortgage, but free from subsequent encumbrances. (15)—Mortgage—Prohibition of alienation—Subsequent mortgage—First mortgagee getting only simple money decree buying mortgaged property—Condition against alienation available as against subsequent mortgagee.—The holder of a hypothecation bond, who, in execution of a money-decree obtained on such bond, purchases the hypothecated property, can avail himself of a condition in the hypothecation deed prohibiting alienation to resist the claim of a subsequent encumbrancer. duties of purchaser—Execution sale—Agreement among purchasers.—Where certain debtors offered to pay their debt by certain instalments and pledged their property, agreeing that the same may be sold if they defaulted in paying the kists due and prayed that the decree might be drawn up accordingly, held, that the effect of the decree and the sale thereunder (on default) was to make the property liable for sale in liquidation of the decree and that the sale passed the property as it stood at the time when it was originally mortgaged. Held, that a purchaser from the judgment-debtor was entitled to recover the amount paid by him in respect of previous mortgages if, in making those payments, he merely acted for the debtor who had borrowed the money from him and what he did was to see that the money so borrowed was properly applied in clearing off those debts which rendered his own purchase unsafe and of the existence of which he was at that time cognizant. It is questionable whether a person claiming by purchase from a judgment-debtor is in a position to succeed under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859. [Appl., 24 W. (2)—*Civ. Pro. But the suit must be a suit to set aside the Court's order; because, as that order is an adjudication in a matter in which a Judge executing a decree has jurisdiction, it must be treated as binding until it is set aside. (9 W.R. 544, R.) The Court which can adjudicate between the conflicting claims of attaching creditors is the Court in which the money is in deposit. WOOMA MOYEE BURMONYA v. (3)—Attachment under Reg. II of 1806 and Act VIII of 1859—Suit to set aside sale—Subsequent attachment of same property—Collusive decree—Fraud.—When a decree-holder has attached certain property under Reg. II of 1806 there is no law which could prevent other decree-holders attaching the same property and having it sold in execution of their decrees, notwithstanding the existence of the previous attachment A question might arise at the time of the distribution of the sale proceeds whether the party who has made the attachment under Reg. II of 1806 would be entitled to have his claim satisfied before the other decree holders. But it is clear that any sale under those circumstances would be a good and valid one. An auction-sale in execution of a decree cannot be set aside, as regards the auction-purchaser, against whom no fraud has been alleged, whether the order of the Court under which the sale took place was illegal or not. And even if the decree in execution of which the sale took place were a collusive one, the rights of the auction-purchaser would not be affected thereby, if he was no party to the fraud, and therefore there would be no ground for setting aside the sale. (5)—Execution of decree—Attachment by several creditors—Priority of claim—Rateable distribution.—Certain Government promissory notes were attached in execution of several decrees against the same person, but were not brought to sale, apparently under the impression that they could not be sold. Subsequently, in consequence of an expression of opinion by the High Court in an appeal, one of the decree-holders again attached the notes and brought them to sale. The Court directed full payment to him and to two other decree-holders, who were acting jointly in execution with him, and rateable distribution in respect of the remaining decree-holders. Thereupon one of these latter brought a suit for a declaration of his preferential claim. Held, that, looking to the very ancient dates of the proceedings and the evident intention of the parties not to sell the property when each attachment was made, the plaintiff could not be regarded as being the first attaching creditor within the purview of s. 270 of Act VIII of 1859, as the attachment contemplated by that Code was an attachment with the intention of sale. The decree-holder, who brought the notes to sale immediately after the opinion of the High Court, that they were saleable, was entitled to be paid in full and not the other two decree-holders, who were also paid in full along with him. These latter were directed to refund the excess they had got to the remaining decree-holders. SHIB NARAIN PAL v. KOONJO KAMINEE DABEE, 22 W.R. 466.

a claim was disallowed to certain property attached in execution of a decree, and the property was sold and after satisfaction of the decree, it was ordered that the surplus proceeds should be rateably distributed among the judgment-creditors who had subsequently attached, held that the Principal Sudder Amin had no jurisdiction to make another order setting aside the previous order for distribution, so far as it affected some of the creditors, on the application of the unsuccessful claimant again preferring his claim to the property. The High Court could, therefore, interfere to set it aside under its general power of superintendance. (12)—Decree against estate of deceased person —Purchase of decree by legal representative— Realization of amount under decree—Right of purchaser to rateable distribution under s. 295, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882.—In execution of a decree against a firm, of which H (deceased) was a partner, property belonging to H was attached. On the 9th November 1886, V (the legal representative of H) purchased the decree from the decree-holder with money borrowed from C and Co., with whom he entered into an agreement to re-pay the debt out of the proceeds realized by the sale of the property in execution of the decree which he had purchased. Meanwhile W purchased another decree obtained against the same firm from another decree-holder, and applied for execution of the decree prior to 9th November, 1886. The proceeds realised by the sale of the attached property were ordered to be rateably distributed between V and W. The latter preferred an appeal and contended that the purchase of the decree by V from the decree-holder extinguished it as against the estate of H and that it amounted to a purchase of the attached properties on behalf of the estate of H. Held that V was entitled to rateable distribution. Held also that (1) V was only liable for the debt of W as the representative of H, (2) that, so far as he might have had property of his own available for the purpose—not derived from the estate of H—he stood in the same position as a third party who might have purchased the decree-holder's share of the proceeds before they were realised, (3) that the purchase by V of the decree-holder's share with his own money could not prejudice W any more than if an entire stranger had purchased, (4) that if the money did not come from the estate of H, it could not matter whether it came directly from the pocket of V or from another person at his request, and (5) that, if the money was derived from a source having no connection, directly or indirectly with the estate indebted, there was no distinction in principle between

Subsequent to the decree in the above suit, G assigned the fund belonging to him (expressed to be Rs. 7,818) in the hands of the Railway Company to A, subject to the attachment of W. Subsequent to the assignment other creditors of G attached the same fund. The Railway Company paid over to the Sheriff under a consent order, the sum of Rs. 8,084. A contended that he was entitled to the fund subject only to the claim of W, and the subsequent attaching creditors had no claim on it. Held, (a) that the fund must be regarded as "assets realized by sale or otherwise, in execution of a decree" within the meaning of s. 295, Civ. Pro. Code. A prohibitory order under s. 268 served upon a debtor of a judgment-debtor is a process in execution of the decree, and when the debt is paid into Court by the debtor in compliance with such order, all the conditions with respect to the character of the fund to be dealt with, which are prescribed for the application of s. 295, are satisfied, and the moneys in the hands of the Sheriff must be deemed subject to the provisions contained in that section. The attachment was not limited in this case merely to such portion of the fund as covered the amount of the decree, but was a valid attachment in the form in which it was made, namely, on the whole fund in the hands of the Railway Company. The misdescription of the property in the order of attachment in this case was held to be a mere falsa demonstratio, and it was held that the entire sum in the hands of the Railway Company was attached. The description of the property must be reasonably accurate under the circumstances and such as executed by two persons and gave as security the property of one of them. In execution of the decree the property of the other debtor was seized and she paid the whole of the debt to avoid a sale of her property. She then brought a suit for contribution against her co-sharer and in the execution of the decree obtained in the suit attached the mortgaged property. The attachment having been raised on the objection of a subsequent purchaser of the property, she sued for a declaration of her right to attach the property in execution of her decree for contribution and having obtained a decree in her favour in the Appellate Court, she sold the property in execution. The decree of the Appellate Court was however set aside by the High Court in special appeal. The question now was what was the right of the purchaser under the above sale. Held that what was sold was the interest of the co-debtor in the property. The High Court having set aside the decree in execution of which the property was sold, the co-debtor had no interest in the property that could be sold. Consequently, the purchaser bought what was worthless. RAM SUHAI SINGH v. CHUTTUR KOOER, 22 W.R. 452.

The High Court, however, was of opinion that it is only that which is attached and advertised that could pass by the sale. The property not attached and not advertised for sale cannot at all be sold in execution of a decree; and it follows from this that the quantity and nature of rights and interest existing in the debtor at the time of advertisement and attachment can alone pass by the sale in execution. (14)—Relinquishment—Alienation before attachment—Sale in execution—Rights of purchaser.—Plaintiff's father in execution of a simple money decree dated 29th January, 1867, attached the right, title and interest of A in certain property and purchased it himself in Court-auction in 1868. In a suit by plaintiff for possession of the said property, the defendant J's contention was that only a 4 anna share belonged at the time of sale to A, and that the other 4 annas claimed by plaintiff belonged to R who transferred them to the defendant J on the 13th of May 1868. The plaintiff's case was that the 4 annas which once belonged to R had passed from him to A and belonged to her at the time of sale. But, before the plaintiff's father purchased in 1868, various proceedings had been taken in which the right to the 4 annas' share which was said to have passed under a hibba from R to A was discussed and as a result of those proceedings it appeared that in a regular suit a decree was made on the 20th July 1867, which declared that the 4 annas belonged to R and not to A. It was in fact substantially decided that the property had not been transferred by a hibba or otherwise to A. Held that inasmuch as the attachment effected by plaintiff's father, which was the foundation for the plaintiff's title was subsequent to the decree of the 20th July 1867, plaintiff had no interest in the property and no right to interfere with it. (17)—Execution sale—Duty of purchaser where Court has jurisdiction.—Bona fide *purchaser at execution sale—Cross decrees—Civ. Pro. If the Court has jurisdiction, a purchaser is no more bound to enquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues. Where there is a bona fide purchaser for fair value in execution of a valid decree, the mere existence of a cross-decree for a higher amount in the judgment-debtor's favour would not, in the absence of fraud, be sufficient to set aside such sale. When he made default, G attached the house in question and brought it to sale in spite of the objections of K's wife under s. 246, Civ. Pro. K's wife sued to set aside the auction sale and obtained a decree by which she got possession of the house. K then sued to recover the money paid by him as auction-purchaser to the decree-holder. Held that he took the risk of a buyer under the circumstances and that the decree-holder was certainly in nowise responsible for his mistake in buying the house and paying the money without enquiring into or considering the question of the title to it, or even the effect in that respect of his own deed of gift to his wife, his own act. On the death of that member, the zemindar brought a suit for rent against his heir only, and in execution of the decree obtained in the suit purchased the property himself and took khas possession thereof. Subsequently, the zemindar made a settlement of the property with the said heir. Sometime after, the right and interest of the latter in the property was sold in execution of a decree obtained against him by a third person and the purchaser obtained possession of the jote property. Thereupon, the plaintiff brought the present suit for possession of a share of the property, as representing her husband who was another member of the family. It was proved that the zemindar had been receiving rent from the plaintiff's husband also. Held, that the rights and interests of the plaintiff were not extinguished by the fresh settlement made by the zemindar with the heir of the member, whose name had been registered. The zemindar having known the rights of the plaintiff's husband in the family and having received rent from him, could have made the fresh settlement only with regard to the rights and interests of the heir of that member, and the purchaser got that right alone. In the present case, a decree-holder having failed to enforce his lien in his original suit in consequence of having obtained therein a mere money-decree, sued to have his lien established and given effect to. He was held to be entitled to have the rights and interests of the mortgagor, as they were at the date of the mortgage, sold in satisfaction of his claim ; and so, if, as a matter of fact, his mortgage was prior to any of the others, the sale under the decree obtained by him would practically override any sales which may have taken place. The real question for decision was whether defendants held bona fide possession for a time sufficient to bar plaintiff under the law of limitation. Held that it was necessary to go, not only into the relative position of the judgment-debtor to the purchaser, his alleged spiritual guide, or the registry of the deed, but to trace step by step the conduct and possession and acts of ownership and appropriation of the profits during the possession by the defendants. (46)—Sale of decree for possession of land—Decision by Court against legality of sale, whether extinguishes decree—Rights of vendor and vendee.—Where a party has obtained a decree for possession of land, the mere allegation of the judgment-debtor that he is not in possession is not sufficient to nullify that decree and render it infructuous. The Court has authority to put the decree-holder in possession of the property decreed, and, if there be any opposition on the part of any third party in possession, the Court will hear and decide the claim of such party under the provisions of s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859. In the absence of any such opposition, possession will have to be given. In the present case the defendants were not interested, except in regard to costs and mesne profits from a certain date, which the decree-holder having agreed to give up, they were not in a position to raise any objection to possession being given her. Where, on a decree having been sold, the Court decides that no legal sale had taken place as no consideration had passed, such decision cannot obliterate the decree. The vendee's rights might be extinguished, but the rights of the vendor could not be, there being no reason why she should not be allowed to revert to her former position as decree-holder. He can sue to obtain possession of the estate purchased by him, if he can make out that the debtor made a mere collusive transfer of it into another person's name, and the defendant cannot prove that it was bona fide transaction. (57)—Purchasers from judgment-debtor, not parties to suit so as to be competent to appeal—Decree-holder, competency of, to release portion of property attached.—In answer to the preliminary objection taken in this case that the petitioners could not be heard in appeal, because they were not parties to the suit, petitioners contended that, as purchasers of the property of the judgment-debtor, they stood in his shoes and were therefore in a position to appeal to the Court. The High Court, however, was of opinion that they were admittedly not parties to the suit, and the mere fact of their having purchased under an execution-sale could not give them a right to appeal regarding the same. If the petitioners had purchased by private sale, they could certainly not have been considered parties to the suit, and the mere fact that the purchase happened to be in execution could not alter their position. A decree-holder is not prohibited, at the time of sale, from releasing a portion of the property advertised, should he have grounds for doing so, and it is not sufficient for an objector to raise hypothetical cases of probable injury but to show that there has been positive injury by some irregularity in the sale proceedings BEET BHUNJUN SING v. for the restoration of the specific moveable or for its value. The fact that the real owner may have a remedy by a suit for damages against the execution-creditor, for causing the property to be attached and sold, is no reason why he should be debarred from bringing a suit to recover the property itself from the auction-purchaser. Though s. 297 of Act X of 1877 provides that on payment of the purchase-money, a sale of moveable property in execution of decree becomes absolute, this must be taken only to mean a sale of property which the Court has jurisdiction to sell; and in no case is the sale absolute in the sense that it cannot be set aside by regular suit. (61)—Execution of decree—Wrongful sale of property—Subsequent destruction—Liability of decree-holder—Costs.—Where, in execution of a decree, a certain house belonging to a third person was attached and sold as the property belonging to the judgment-debtor, and the house was subsequently destroyed, held that the decree-holder was not liable, except where the decree-holder and the purchaser joined in demolishing the house and making away with the materials. A instituted a suit against P and D. The first Court exonerated P and decreed the claim against D. A did not prefer an appeal but D appealed making A and P respondents to the appeal, which was dismissed. D thereupon filed a special appeal to the High Court against A and P. Held that, inasmuch as A was satisfied with the decree of the first Court by not appealing from it and could not as co-respondent, object to the judgment as against the other respondent P, the decision of the first Court was final, and, as against P, the case was at an end before the special appeal was filed, and that, therefore, P was entitled to his costs of special appeal from D (the special appellant). The High Court, however, held that, in the absence of either an attachment prior to sale not taken off, or of proof of acceptance by the new owners of the liability, there was no lien, and no liability of the new owners (who had bought the property not in the custody of the law, with no special acceptance of special liabilities). of the appellant, it had been agreed between him and the said S B, that he should not execute this decree, but purchase from her a certain estate in consideration of the decree and for a further consideration of Rs. 500 in cash. A mooktearnamah had been executed by S B on behalf of a third party authorizing him to sign her name to the bill of sale. Before this mooktearnamah could be verified and the agent become competent to sign the deed of sale the principal died. And, notwithstanding her death, the plaintiff took a conveyance of sale from the agent of the dead principal. Plaintiff paid to the agent the cash Rs. 500 and took and held possession of the estate for some years when he was ousted by the heirs of S B and the other defendants who claimed to have purchased her estate. The plaintiff now sued for recovery of possession. He sued the heirs of the agent, also the heirs of S B, and all other parties whom he said he found now in possession of the property sold to him, and over which he thought he had a lien, for the money paid by him, as well as for the amount of his decree not executed by him according to his contract of purchase, and which decree he could not now execute owing to limitation affecting his rights. Held that the sale to the plaintiff under the deed executed by the agent was valid so far as regards the right of the purchaser to recover the purchase-money. The lower appellate Court had wrongly added that the heirs of S B were not bound by any action of her agent done by him after her death. But the High Court was of opinion that if the money had reached the heirs as part of the contract of purchase to which they agreed and they had accepted it as such, there is no reason why they should not be held liable for it when the property had been taken away from the plaintiff. (5)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 254—Order holding defaulting purchaser liable for difference on re-sale—Appeal.—The respondent bid for certain property put up to sale in execution of the decree held by the appellant, and it was knocked down to him. The next day, the property was sold in execution of a decree held by another party who had a previous lien on the estate, and, consequently, the respondent refused to pay the purchase-money; and, under the provisions of s. 254, the property was re-sold for a sum less than that bid by the respondent, and it was to recover that difference that the present application was made. The High Court remarked that the grounds on which the lower Court had released the respondent from the claim were altogether untenable and held that the respondent, notwithstanding the subsequent sale on the following day, was bound to make good his purchase. He had purchased something, though perhaps less than what he expected, and, if he chose to bid, he was bound to complete his purchase. It was contended in this case that no appeal lay to the High Court as the parties were not in the position of parties to the suit, but it was held that, looking at the wording of the latter end of s. 254, the parties under consideration may fairly be taken to come within the meaning of the terms "parties" in s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861. The first auction-purchaser is liable to make good the difference between his bid and the amount which was bid for the property at the re-sale, only when he made default in paying the balance of purchase-money under s. 254, but not when default is made in depositing the 25 per centum of the sale-proceeds as required by s. 253. Before, however, the re-sale took place, another decree-holder who had also attached this property in execution of his decree, applied for the sale of it and sold it at a lower price than on the first occasion. Held that there was no re-sale of the property as contemplated in ss. 253 and 254 of the Code, though one was ordered. The first purchaser was therefore not liable to make good the difference which was not a difference at a re-sale of the property, as no re-sale had, as a matter of fact or law, taken place. Where it appears from the sale sheet that H held himself out as agent only for M and that M was accepted as purchaser on his bid and the Judge conducting the sale wrote down H's statement that he had effected the purchase in the interest of M, merely in order that, by so doing, he might prevent disputes under s. 260 of Act VIII of 1859, held when it became necessary to have a second sale and to call upon the purchaser at the first sale to make good the consequent difference of price under the terms of s. 254 of the Act, that M was the apparent first purchaser and therefore the person to whom recourse should first be had, and that he ought to be called upon to show cause why an order for payment of this difference should not be made upon him. Process of execution could not in any case rightly issue against the defaulting purchaser for the difference of price which is leviable from him under the terms of s. 254, Civ. Pro. He set off the amount of the purchase-money against the sum due under the decree. The remainder was paid in cash by the judgment-debtor and the decree was thus fully executed. Subsequently, the wife of the judgment-debtor brought a suit for the same property alleging it was hers, and not the judgment debtor's. It was found that there was no fraud on the part of the judgment-debtor, and she recovered possession. Thereupon the decree-holder sought for fresh execution of his decree to the extent of the money which had been paid for the property. Held that no fresh execution of the decree could issue. If the auction-purchaser had been a stranger, he would not have been entitled to recover his purchase-money, and the decree-holder is not in a better position than any other auction-purchaser, a stranger. covenants do not extend, he cannot recover the purchase money either at law or in equity ("Sugden on Vendors and Purchasers," p. 441, R.). There is a great distinction between the case of a purchaser evicted by title paramount, and that of the conveyance by the vendors being set aside. In the one case, the owner of the land recovers notwithstanding the conveyance, because it was a conveyance of his land by a person who had no right to convey it; in the other case, where a sale has been set aside, the purchaser usually has a right to recover back his purchase-money, because it would be inequitable that the vendors should retain the purchase-money when there are grounds for setting aside the sale by which the contract is put an end to. But a Court of Equity does not set aside a conveyance, simply because the conveying party had no title to the property. There must be something more, such as fraud or the like, to induce the Court to infer in that manner. A purchaser at a sale in execution knows that all that he purchases is the right and title of the judgment-debtor. He knows that no one guarantees to him that the judgment-debtor has a good title and he purchases the property with his eyes open, and regulates the price which he bids for the land with reference to the circumstances under which he is purchasing and the risk he runs. D sued B and C for establishing his title to property contending that the property belonged to him, got a decree and obtained possession in execution thereof. C thereupon applied to the Court under s. 315, Civ. Pro. Code, for a refund of the purchase-money, which application was resisted by the original decree-holder A, who contended that he was not liable to refund the purchase-money, since he was no party to the suit brought by D, with the result that he had no opportunity of showing that the property in dispute was rightly sold under his decree. Nevertheless, the Court ordered A to re-pay the purchase-money to C. Held in revision, reversing the order of the lower Court, that A could not be ordered to refund the purchase-money to C. S. 315, Civ. Pro. Where the sale is set aside after the purchaser had taken possession, laid out money and received rents and profits, he should, in equity, get back the money laid out by him for the benefit of the estate in addition to his purchase-money and interest thereon, and should also account to the judgment-debtor for the profits received by him. (1)—Civ. Pro. Code, Act XIV of 1882, s. 310-A—Deposit—Poundage—Application to set aside sale.—When the judgment-debtor has deposited the amounts specified in cls. (a) and (b) of s. 310-A of the Civ. Pro. Code, he is entitled to have the sale set aside, notwithstanding the fact that some amount on account of poundage was recoverable from him under the head of costs provided for in the last clause of the section. The remedy of the purchaser is to apply to the Court for recovering what is due to him unders ss. 310-A and 315. MUTHU AYYAR v. RAMASAMI SASTRIGAL, 20 M. 158. [R., 23 B. 450.]

(2)—Auction sale—Suit to set aside.—A suit to set aside an auction-sale in execution of a decree is maintainable. RAM PRASAD v. NAFAILI KUARI, A.W.N. 1882, 5.

(3)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 311—Suit to set aside Court sale.—When the mortgagor of certain property which has been brought to sale in execution of a decree obtained thereon, sues to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud practised by the purchaser, the pleader of the mortgagee in purchasing the property himself in an underhand manner, the circumstance, that fraud was not alleged against the purchaser in a petition brought for the same purpose under s. 311, Civ. Pro. Code, would not vitiate the suit. SUBBARAYUDU v. KOTAYYA, 15 M. 389. [R., 23 A. 478.]

(4)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 311—Execution sale—Person competent to set aside sale.—A person who claimed to be the owner of the property (sold in execution of a decree) as purchaser under a private sale is not competent to object under s. 311, Civ. Pro. Code, and set aside the execution sale. BHAWANI DAS v. TULSI RAM, A.W.N. 1883, 7. (3 A.W.N. 7, F.)

(5)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 311—Execution sale—Persons competent to set aside sale.—Under s. 311, Civ. Pro. Code, the persons who can prefer objections are the decree-holder and any person whose immoveable property has been sold. A stranger is not entitled to come in under that section to set aside a sale. AHMADUDDIN KHAN v. SHEORAJ SINGH, A.W.N. 1883, 7.

(6)—Execution sale—Suit against auction-purchaser for possession by setting aside sale—Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, s. 244.—Where the property is purchased at an execution sale held in pursuance of an order under s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code, by a person not a party to the suit, and that order is subsequently set aside, held, the order directing the sale had the force of a decree, and that the judgment-debtor could not sue the auction-purchaser for recovery of the property by setting aside the sale. (8)—Plea that decree is not binding--Question of "bona fide."—The question of whether the purchase was made bona fide and for value does not arise in a case in which a sale in execution of decree is sought to be set aside on the ground that the decree does not in terms make answerable parties whose interests in the property are sold. KOMBI v. LAKHMI, 5 M. 201. [R., 10 M. 79, 8 M. 484, F.B., 20 M. 129, F.B.]

Code*, 1882 (=s. 73 and O. XXI, r. 89, present Code)—Rateable distribution—Application for setting aside sale by deposit of debt due to decree-holder at whose instance the property is sold.—The effect of s. 310-A is to put the owner of the property practically in the same position in which he would have been, if he had paid the amount due under the decree before the sale took place. When property has been sold in execution of a decree and there are other decree-holders, who, prior to the sale, have applied under s. 295, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, for rateable distribution, the person whose property has been sold is competent to have the sale set aside under s. 310-A by depositing only the amount of the decree for the satisfaction of which the sale was proclaimed and took place. property to be put up for sale. This contention was held by the High Court to be untenable, because it was not even suggested that the plaintiff was guilty of any fraud or misrepresentation that could deprive him of a right which he could otherwise assert ; nor did he in any way guarantee the validity of the sale under the decree. Code.* (1882, 1884)—Deposit provided for in s. 310-A not paid within 30 days—Court's power to set aside sale.—Where a judgment-debtor does not, within 30 days from the date of sale deposit in Court a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the purchase-money, and the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder, but has deposited in Court within the prescribed period a sum calculated by some officer of the Court as the sum to be deposited in respect of such 5 per cent and the amount specified in such proclamation of the sale, the Court cannot pass an order setting aside the sale under s. 310-A, Civ. Pro. Code, there being nothing to show that there was any mistake of the Court by which the judgment-debtor was induced to deposit an insufficient amount. (25 C. 609, D.) The mistake of an officer of the Court in calculating the sum to be deposited cannot avail the judgment-debtor, unless he can shew that the mistake was made by an officer whose duty and within whose province it was to give the information. Where, therefore, an auction sale of landed property was set aside, under s. 257, on the sole objection of the judgment-debtor that the price realized was low, there being no allegation or proof of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, in other words, no objection permissible by s. 256 having been made by the judgment-debtor, held, that the Court had failed to do the duty imposed on it by law of confirming the sale, and exceeded its jurisdiction by cancelling the sale. Under the above circumstances, a suit will lie by the auction purchaser to cancel the order of the Court cancelling the sale. SUKHAI v. DARYAI, 1 A. 374. (All. H. C's. Decision in S.A. (16)—Sale under decree in execution of a decree, setting aside of.—A Court has no power to set aside a sale unless the judgment-debtor has strictly complied with the provisions of s. 310-A of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. TRIMBAK v. RAMCHANDRA, 1 Bom. L.R. 215 = 23 B. 723.

(17)—S. 244, Act XIV of 1882 (Civ. Pro. Code)—Execution sale—Suit to set it aside—Parties to the suit—Fraud.—All objections to execution-sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. The Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code. When questions are raised between the parties to a decree relating to its execution, discharge, or satisfaction, the fact that the purchaser at an execution-sale, who is no party to the suit, is interested and concerned in the result has never been held a bar to the application of the section, limiting the disposal of these matters to the Court executing the decree. Certain property having been sold by the Court in execution of a decree, the judgment-debtor impeached the sale in a suit on the ground that it had been brought about by fraud andcollusion on the part of the decree-holder and the Court-purchaser, in that the decree-holder had brought the property to sale in breach of his agreement with the judgment-debtor and that the purchaser had purchased with notice of the agreement: the ground on which the sale was attacked was, substantially, that the judgment-debtor had brought the property to sale without any right to sell it. Held, that that was a question which could have been determined by the order of the Court, which executed the decree, and that it could not be tried in a separate suit. (18)—Execution sale—Material irregularity in publishing and conducting sale—Setting aside of illegal order passed by Judge on appeal.—The Court of first instance refused to set aside an execution sale from which the judgment-debtor alleged that he had sustained substantial injury on the ground of material irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale; the District Judge on appeal set aside the sale on the ground that the officer conducting the sale should have received the amount of the judgment debt which the judgment-debtor offered to pay after the sale but before its confirmation. Held, that the District Judge's order must be set aside and the sale confirmed, as there is no law authorising the officer conducting the sale to stop it because the judgment-debtor offered to pay the debt to the decree-holder. Held, further, that the Court executing the decree is bound to confirm the sale unless the judgment-debtor seeking to set it aside shows that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of some material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. guilty of an irregularity in accepting the bid. It was no part of that officer's duty to ascertain, before accepting the auction-purchaser's bid, whether he was a co-sharer in the holding or a zemindar or not. Nor could it be contended that the sale should not have been held at all because the provisions of s. 9 of the Act XVIII of 1873 might operate to prevent the acquisition of a good title by other purchasers than co-sharers in the right sold. Such a suit should be brought within a year after the confirmation of the sale, the article applicable being art. 12 and not art. 95, as the plaint did not contain any allegation of fraud. Omission to issue a fresh proclamation is only an irregularity. (18 C. 496, F.) The allegation of the judgment-debtor that the prices were inadequate was found to be based on vague statements, and as no substantial injury was proved the application to set aside the sale was dismissed. Pro. Code, was not served on the plaintiff. Held, that the want of notice under s. 232 (a), Civ. Pro. Code, could not vitiate attachment of property effected on the application of the assignee of the decree, as the judgment-debtor was all along cognizant that it was the assignee who was executing the decree. Held, further, that the defects in the proclamation of sale and in publishing and conducting the auction were matters which should have formed the subject of an application under s. 311, Civ. Pro. It was found that there were no substantial defects in the attachment which rendered the sale a nullity. HARNAM SINGH v. HAMIRA MAL, P.L.R. 1900, p. 157.

Code, by one of the two judgment-debtors (the other having died) asking the Court to set aside the sale on the grounds:—(1) that sanction of the Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner had not been obtained as required by s. 20, Act XVIII of 1876; (2) that the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor had not been brought on the record under s. 234 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (3) that an order absolute for sale had not been obtained under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act:—Held, that these grounds did not constitute any material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale within the meaning of s. 311, Civ. Pro. (24)—Execution sale, suit to set aside—Separate suit—Maintainability—Execution sale, effect of, before confirmation—Second sale after prior un-confirmed sale.—Where, after an ineffectual attempt in all the Courts to set aside an execution sale on the ground of irregularity, it was sought, by a separate suit, to set it aside, on account of a prior execution sale of the same property having been set asde, (which took place long after the confirmation of the second sale), held, the separate suit would lie, as it was not one to set it aside on the ground of fraud or anything connected with the sale itself, and as no execution proceedings were pending in which it was possible for the plaintiff to raise the question under s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code. (11 C. 376, Diss.) There is more than a contract for sale in the interval between an execution sale and its confirmation; there is an inchoate transfer of title, which only requires to be perfected by confirmation. Code, s.* 312.—A sale in execution of a decree can only deal with and pass the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor; and it cannot pass the right, title and interest of others than the judgment-debtor. S. 312, Civ. Pro. Code, states that the Court confirming the sale confirms it as regards parties to the suit and the purchaser. Art. 12 (a) of the Limitation Act is not applicable to a case, in which the plaintiff was not a party to or bound by the sale, which is sought to be set aside. HAJEE GOYA KAKA v. to come in and object to the sale. But the jurisdiction of the Judge to receive such an application is not limited to that period; and there is nothing in s. 257 of the Act to lead to the inference that the Judge has no jurisdiction to receive such an application at any time before the sale in confirmed. (35)—Execution sale—Want of jurisdiction—Burden of proof.—An execution sale of a village cannot be set aside on the ground that the Court which sold it had no local jurisdiction, unless it is clearly found that in fact and in law, the village belongs to another jurisdiction. Where this objection is taken, not before the sale, but at the very latest possible moment, it is for the objectors to prove indisputably the absence of jurisdiction. MOONSHEE MAHOMED RUSHEED KHAN v. Code, to set aside a sale of immoveable property on certain grounds. On March 15th they withdrew the application and it was accordingly dismissed. On the same day they made an application under s. 310-A, Civ. Pro. Code, and deposited the sum required by that section. The Munsif set aside the sale. Held, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale. The words "if a person applies" in the proviso to s. 310-A must be taken in their literal and primary meaning and that the judgment-debtor's second application was barred by that proviso. MATADIN v. (37)—Execution of decree—Decree passed without jurisdiction—Sale in execution—Sale before advertised date—Illegality.—A obtained a decree against B and C. B was not carrying on business, nor was he a resident within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it. B died and her executor appealed on that ground, and the appellate Court reversed the decree, so far as it was against her. The decree had been, before reversal, transferred to another Court for execution and B's property was attached and brought to sale. B's executor then applied both to the Court which passed the decree, and also to the Court to which it was sent for execution for a stay of sale. The former Court passed an order staying the sale provided security was given by B's executor. Before that order could be communicated to the latter Court, the property of B, had been sold 15 days earlier than that fixed in the sale proclamation and purchased by D. When D was attempting to take possession he was informed by a letter from B's executor that he was purchasing under a decree passed without jurisdiction. B's executor then sued to have the sale set aside, and claimed also mesne profits. Held (1) that if the sale had not taken place earlier than the date fixed in the sale proclamation, B's executor would have brought a substantial objection to the sale, and this irregularity in the sale caused substantial injury to the plaintiff and the sale must therefore be set aside; (2) that the plaintiff was also entitled to mesne profits from the date on which he gave notice to the purchaser, subject of course to the payment of compensation for improvements effected by him bona fide. caused property M to be first sold. The present applicant, claiming as a purchaser of property M, under a sale subsequent to the mortgage, came to the Court claiming under s. 256 to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity. On the question which arose as to whether the applicant could come in under s. 256, it was held that he could not come in under that section; and, on that ground and also, because of the absence of any irregularity in the sale, the High Court refused to interfere with the order of the lower Court. Per Seton—Karr, J., dissentiente:—The words of s. 257 of Act VIII of 1859, viz., "application may be made to the Court" are very general and the application is not to be regarded as one restricted to "parties to the suit." The words of the section are so wide and comprehensive as to embrace every one affected by a sale of immoveable property. On the above ground, the applicant in the present case having clearly sustained injury by an unnecessary deviation from the proper and prescribed order of things, was entitled to the relief sought by him. Where the proclamation of sale was not only not issued in the form prescribed by the High Court but also failed to contain the required particulars as to the extent of the property to be sold and the revenue or rent assessed on the land, it was held that there have been material irregularities in the publication of the sale causing substantial injury and precluding the confirmation of the sale. Where the representative takes the objection that he has inherited nothing, such objection though valid, could be of no avail unless it had been taken before the sale in execution of the decree had taken place, because such an objection is not one of those irregularities which would entitle the representatives, under s. 256, to ask the Court to set aside the sale. The High Court therefore came to the conclusion that the objection, in the present case, however valid, was not an irregularity contemplated in s. 256 of Act VIII of 1859; that consequently the sale that had taken place before such objection was raised could not be legally set aside and must be confirmed; and that the only course open to the representative to set it aside was by suit in the Civil Court. Code, Act VIII of 1859 s. 270—Attachment subsisting at time of sale—Right of parties—Priority according to date of attachment.—It was contended in this case that the mere striking off of a case in execution does not necessarily cause the attachment previously taken out to become null and void; but that, on the case being restored to the file, the case is revived with all its incidents, including the attachment, and without fresh process; but, it was held that, according to the decisions on a case in execution being struck off the file, the attachment necessarily falls in. The attachment previously taken out by the defendant in this case had ceased on his execution case having been struck off the file, and he was remitted to his former position of a simple judgment-creditor; and had to begin de novo and to re-attach the properties before a sale at his instance took place. In s. 201 of Act VIII of 1859, the words "attachment and sale" must be taken together and not distributively, and consequently it cannot be said that moveable property which has not been attached and consequently, cannot be to be "in custodia legis," can be sold. So, no sale in execution of a decree can take place either of moveable or immoveable property without previous attachment, and a sale had without previous attachment irregular and illegal. Under s. 249 of the Civ. Pro. Code in all cases of intended sale by public auction, whether of moveable or immoveable property in execution of a decree, any particulars which the Court may think necessary ought to be specified in the sale proclamation. In the present case, no particulars were given, and the High Court observed that, though the lower Court would have exercised a wise discretion, if all particulars, such as the numbers, the value, the year of the loan, the amount of interest due and the rate of interest, etc., had been given yet, the omission of such particulars, which it was in the discretion of the Court to give or to withhold, did not cause any such injury to the plaintiffs as could enable them to sustain an action under s. 252 of Act VIII of 1859. It was objected also that the Government promissory notes belonging to the judgment-debtor which were under attachment in this case ought to have been produced in Court. But the High Court held that it was not essential that they should be brought into the Court of the officer conducting the sale; they were to all intents and purposes "in custodia legis." The notes were in the custody of the Collector. Intending purchasers were not prevented from inspecting those notes, and obtaining any information as to their value which they might require. Under s. 270 of the Civ. Pro. Code, Act VIII of 1859, the judgment-creditor whose attachment subsists at the time of sale is entitled, according to priority of date of attachment, to be satisfied first; and where the attachment by one party made under cl. 1 of s. 5, Reg. II of 1806, has been subsisting up to the date of sale, and an attachment by another party which, though prior in date, had subsequently fallen through and become void by his execution case having been struck off the file, the party whose attachment was pending at the time of the sale would be entitled to the entire sale proceeds of the attached property. Code*, 1882, ss. 244, 311—Agreement to pay on certain date—Forfeiture—Court of Equity, when to interfere—Contract, essence of—Intention.—Where an agreement secured is simply one for the payment of money, relief is afforded against forfeiture on the ground that such condition and forfeiture are intended merely as a security for the payment of money. It cannot be affirmed as a general rule that equity will relieve against forfeitures in all cases where compensation can be made. If forfeiture is occasioned by accident, fraud, surprise or ignorance, a Court of Equity will interfere and relieve against forfeiture so caused, but a Court of Equity will refuse to aid a defaulter, if the forfeiture is wilful or is the result of gross negligence. Whether the time of performance fixed by an agreement is of the essence of the contract or not, depends upon the intention of the parties. It must be ascertained whether, in fact, the performance of the contract by one party was meant to depend upon the other party's promise being fulfilled by the day named therefor, or whether a day was named merely in order to secure performance within a reasonable time. If the former is found to have been the intention, no relief can be claimed against forfeiture; if the latter is found to have been the intention, equity will not refuse relief, if the promise required to be performed was performed

It has been held that a sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree which property is situated beyond the jurisdiction of the Court making the decree, will not be good unless it has been made in strict observance of the procedure prescribed by s. 285 of Act VIII of 1859, and, in accordance with such rulings the attachment in this case was to be deemed to be insufficient to support the subsequent sale. S. 256 of Act VIII of 1859 refers to objections by judgment-debtors who must prove, to the satisfaction of the Court, that they have sustained substantial injury by reason of irregularities, before a sale can be set aside. (86)—Execution case — Transfer of, from Subordinate Judge's Court to District Court—Jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code, Act VIII of 1859, s. 6—Sale of property in portions—Discretion of executing Court—Sale of portion of judgment debtor's property sufficient to satisfy decree—Whole property sold—Irregularity—Substantial injury.—S. 6, Act VIII of 1859, does not authorize the District Court to remove to itself or to transfer to any other Court proceedings in a suit which have been already commenced and entertained in any Court subordinate to itself. It was held that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to call up an execution case from the file of a Court subordinate to his own Court. [Appl., 15 C. 177; R., 23 M. 314=10 M.L.J. 51=32 C. 875=9 C.W.N. 705.] It is within the discretion of an executing Court to direct the sale of the judgment-debtor's property in portions, even though it had been attached or proclaimed as an entirety. It is damage to a person to have his whole property sold against his will to satisfy the claims of a creditor when the sale of a smaller portion would be sufficient for the purpose. So, where in execution of a decree, the whole of the judgment-debtor's property was ordered to be sold instead of a portion which would be sufficient to satisfy the decretal debt, held that the irregularity was one causing substantial injury to the judgment-debtor. (87)—Execution of decree—Decree for sale of mortgaged-property and for costs—Execution for whole amount of decree against other property of judgment-debtor—Suit to set aside sale—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 311 and 312.—In execution of a decree for the sale of mortgaged-property and for costs, other property of the judgment-debtor was attached and sold. On the objection of the judgment-debtor, it was eventually decided by the High Court that such property was not liable to attachment and sale under the decree. In the meanwhile, however, the property had been sold and the sale confirmed. In a suit by the judgment-debtor, against the purchaser, to set aside the sale on the ground that the property was not saleable under the decree; held (a) that the decree as to costs was a personal one, and could be executed against the person and other property of the judgment-debtor; (b) that the attachment and sale were valid as they were made in respect of the costs as well as of the principal and interest decreed. (Per Oldfield, J., Mahmood, J., doubting). Held, also per Mahmood, J. (c) that such a suit would lie, and was not open to any preliminary objection (B.L.R. Sup. Vol. 911, F.); (d) that the decision of the High Court, that the property was not saleable in execution of the decree, being one between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, and having been subsequent, not only to the sale, but to the confirmation of it, cannot be used against the purchaser, especially as it did not decide anything as to the nature of the decree as to costs; (e) that as the attachment was in respect of the whole amount of the decree, and not for costs only, and as there were no separate proceedings in regard to the personal decree against the judgment-debtor, it was doubtful if the attachment, the notification of sale, and the sale itself, were valid; but that, in any case, as these objections were objections cognizable under s. 312 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to the confirmation of sale, a suit to set aside the sale on such grounds alone, is prohibited by the last part of s. 312. RAGHUBAR DAYAL v. The Ameen accordingly did so, and a year after that the defendant objected that in execution of the decree lands in excess of the quantity actually decreed have been made over to the plaintiff, and that he was ignorant of the demarcation made by the Ameen. Held, that a separate suit would not lie to rectify an error caused by an executing Court, and that the defendant must in execution proceedings be given an opportunity to substantiate his objections, and to show that the Ameen's proceedings were held in his absence, and without notice to him. (89)—Sale in execution—Suit by judgment-debtor to set aside—Burden on judgment-debtor of proving irregularity—Omission to give notice, whether vitiates sale.—Plaintiff, the present respondent, sued to set aside the sale of certain land at which defendant-appellant had purchased it. Plaintiff obtained a decree in both the lower Courts. On second appeal it was urged that the plaintiff, who alleged that there had been an irregularity, was bound to prove it, whereas the Principal Sudder Ameen had thrown the onus on the defendant, and that supposing an irregularity proved, it was not of a nature to cause any loss or damage to the judgment-debtor, and could not therefore justify a reversal of the sale. Both points were decided by the High Court in favour of the appellants. Where it is alleged that the necessary notices have not been affixed previous to the sale, the onus of proving the default in affixing the notices lies upon the judgment-debtor, and not upon the auction-purchaser. Also though under certain circumstances, the non-issue of a notice may be an irregularity, still it is not one that can go to vitiate a sale. MUSST. NUFUSA v. (92)—Execution sale—Notice of sale—Uncertainty — Adjournment of sale — Discretion of auctioneer—Notice of higher bid to auctioneer—Reading notice o fliens on estates sold—Practice.—The inam village of Chandanpuri was sold, by order of Court, in execution of a decree, by public auction. The notice of sale stated that the sale would begin at either place Maligam or Chandanpuri, but would be completed at Maligam. Held that the notification was not likely to cause any injury to the judgment-debtors and that the uncertainty in the notice of sale was not such an irregularity as to entitle them to have the sale set aside. There is no rule which compels an auctioneer to close the auction on the first day. It must be left to his judgment to do so when he thinks fit, and much in such cases will depend upon the nature of the property and the circumstances of the sale. There is no obligation on the part of an auctioneer to adjourn the same simply because a person sent him notice to say that he was ready to make a higher bid. The mere fact of Karkuns reading aloud notices of liens on property about to be sold by auction is not such a material irregularity as to reduce the value of the property and thereby vitiate the sale. It is not because an estate has been sold at auction for less than its market value that the judgment-debtor is entitled to have the sale set aside, and the property put up for sale again. He must show that such inadequate price has been directly and presumably the result of the irregularity in the sale of which he complains. under Ben. Reg. VII of 1825, s. 5, had been brought shortly after the date of the sale by the judgment-debtor, to set it aside, on the ground of inadequacy of the purchase-money, which suit was dismissed. There was no allegation in that suit of any irregularity in the publication of sale. It appeared, from the evidence in the suit of 1852, that the notice of sale was affixed at the dwelling-house of the judgment-debtor, the place where his rents were paid but which was not part of the estate sold. It was not pleaded, in the suit of 1852, that there was a town or village, where the notification could be fixed as required by s. 12, Ben. Reg. XLV of 1793. The Sudder Dewanni Court held that there had been an irregularity in the publication of the notice of sale, as it was not made within the ambit of the estate sold, and set the sale aside on that ground. Upon appeal, held by the Judicial Committee, reversing such decree, first, that, as it did not appear that there was any town or village within the pergunnah at which notification required by the provisions of Ben. Reg. XLV of 1793, s. 12, could be affixed, there had been no irregularity in posting the notice at the house of the judgment-debtor, so as to vitiate the sale; and, secondly, that, even if there had been an informality in that respect, it ought to have been objected to in the summary suit brought in 1841, and could not be opened eleven years afterwards. The judgment-debtor who had notice of the intended sale applied for adjournment thereof, but did not object to its taking place. After the properties were sold, he applied for the sale being set aside on the ground that there was no order absolute for sale before the order for sale was passed. Held that as, in the circumstances of the case, there was no allegation that the judgment-debtor had suffered any damage by reason of the defect, the sale could not be set aside. (1) Sale in execution of mortgage-decree—Stay of sale pending administration suit—Stay of execution sale—Appeal—Civ. Pro. Code, 244 (c).—An order staying the sale of mortgaged property in execution of a decree upon a mortgage bond executed by the father of the judgment debtors, on the ground of the pendency of an administration suit regarding the properties of such father, ought not to be made by the Court, in the absence of reasonable grounds for debarring a secured creditor to enforce his security pending the administration-suit. An order as the one stated above which stays the execution of a decree for an indefinite time, and prevents a secured creditor from availing himself of the benefit of his security, is a question relating to the execution of the decree and is appealable as coming under cl. (c), s. 244, of the Civ. Pro. Code. KRISTOMOHINY DOSSEE v. BAMA CHURN NAG CHOWDHRY, 7 C. 733=9 C.L.R. 344. (11 B.H.C. 151, R.) [F., 7 A. 73=4 A.W.N. 226, 13 C. 111; R., 12 C. 624.]

(2)—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 291, 244—Sale in execution, stoppage of, on payment by transferee of property — Question relating to execution, maintainability of separate suit by transferee.—Where a judgment-debtor had sold the property covered by the hypothecation decree against him, and the purchaser assigned it over to some third person, such person would be entitled to come in and protect the property from being sold away in execution, by tendering the whole amount due, under s. 291 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The only right of the decree-holder is to have the debt and costs paid up, and on payment of such money into Court by a third person on behalf of the debtor, it is competent to the Court to accept the money and stop the sale. Where, even after the offer of the money by the assignee in such a case as the above, the sale had taken place, such money not having been accepted by the Court, the assignee could maintain a separate suit to set aside the sale, and s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code would not apply to the case so as to bar such a suit. BEHARI LAL v. GANPAT RAI, 10 A. 1=A.W.N. 1887, 238.

(3)—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 276, 305.—The object of s. 305, Civ. Pro. Code, is to prevent the sale of property attached in execution of decree, if the whole decree can be satisfied within a reasonable time by private alienation, and at the same time to protect the lien the decree-holder has obtained under s. 276. Therefore a mortgage of attached property for a sum less than the decree amount, though it may be bona fide and binding as between the mortgagor (judgment-debtor) and the mortgagee, cannot be valid against the decree-holder, nor can it affect the lien acquired by him under s. 276. (3)—Execution of decree—Sale before advertised time—Validity.—The Civ. Pro. Code, authorizes a sale, which is to be conducted at a time and place properly notified, and a sale otherwise conducted is not a sale at all within the meaning of the Code. The time to be notified for a sale of property in execution of a decree must be the time of the commencement of the sale, in order that all intending purchasers may be enabled to be present during the whole of the proceedings, to see how the biddings go, and that all who are interested in the property sold may see that there is a fair competition and a good sale. Where, therefore, property advertised to be sold at 11 A.M. was sold at 7 A.M. there was something more than a mere irregularity in conducting the sale, and the whole proceedings were invalid. was issued and the proclamation published for the sale of the land which had been previously mortgaged to K. S died on the 27th September, 1877, the sale took place on the 3rd October, 1877, without any notice being given to D, who was the heir and legal representative of S, or her name being placed on the record. T became the purchaser. D came to know of the sale some days after it took place. In 1883, T sold the land to A, who redeemed the mortgage from K and took possession. In 1891, D, as heir and legal representative of S, filed this suit to redeem the land. She made K and A parties to the suit. Her contention was that the sale was absolutely void by reason of the plaintiff not having been brought on the record of the execution proceedings immediately on her father's death. Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem. Per Jardine, J.:—As no "substantial injury" was alleged to have resulted by reason of the plaintiff not having been brought on the record of the execution proceedings immediately on the death of the judgment-debtor and before the sale took place, the purchaser acquired a valid title under s. 316, Civ. Pro. Code. Per Ranade, J.:—The omission to join the name of the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor as a party to the record was a material irregularity, and a serious defect in the title of the purchase. But this irregularity did not vitiate the sale under the special circumstances of the present case, as the plaintiff did not apply under s. 311, Civ. Pro. Code, to have the sale set aside although she came to know of the sale within the period allowed by law for applications to set the sale aside; as there was no fraud or mala fides on the part of the judgment-creditor; as the sale had not resulted in any substantial injury to the plaintiff, and as the auction-purchaser and his assignee had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years. (12)—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 11—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 256, 257, not applicable to suit based on fraud vitiating sale.—Held that s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, and ss. 256 and 257 of Act VIII of 1859, could not apply to the present suit in which fraud was imputed vitiating the sale in toto. The question for decision did not arise between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and relating to the execution of that decree; for, it was contended that the decree that had been executed was not the decree which was passed between the parties, but a decree which had been modified by a subsequent decretal order. S 11, therefore, could not apply. Neither did ss. 256 and 257 of Act VIII, which refer to material irregularities in conducting the sale, apply; for, in the present case, it was averred that the sale was brought about by the fraud of the defendant. The issue of fraud or no fraud having therefore to be necessarily tried, the Principal Sudder Ameen was right in having remanded the case to the Court of first instance for that purpose. A debtor, being in pecuniary difficulties, made a gift of all his property in favour of his wife and his minor sons in 1875. X, a creditor of his, who subsequently obtained a decree against him, sold part of the said property in execution, which was purchased by Y for an inadequate price by means of false representations. An application made by the debtor in 1879 to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud was rejected. In 1884 the minor sons (being represented by their next friend), instituted the present suit to set aside the sale, against Y (the purchaser), alleging that the sale was void by reason of the defendant's fraud and claiming the property as theirs under the gift of 1875. Held (1) that the gift under which the plaintiffs claimed having been made by the debtor, when in pecuniary difficulties, was void against his creditor X, who had a right to sell the property in execution of his decree, that the defendant, as purchaser at the sale acquired a valid title, and that the plaintiffs could not take anything under the deed of gift ; (2) that the plaintiffs could not set aside the sale on the ground of the defendant's fraud. The gift of 1875 made the sons (plaintiffs) and the wife of the debtor tenants-in-common and the plaintiffs were only owners of their respective shares, and consequently could not claim to rescind the sale in toto. Nor could the wife join in rescinding the sale as she must have known of the fraud in 1879, when her husband endeavoured to set aside the sale on that ground. HORMUSJI v. But a decree was obtained on the 9th of October, 1879, on a mortgage executed by the judgment-debtor, and the same property was sold again in execution of the second decree on 11th March, 1880. The former purchaser applied for setting aside the sale to him and asked that his purchase money should be returned to him. Held that if, as a fact, the property sold was covered by the mortgage, there was, under the circumstances, no such saleable interest in the judgment-debtor at the time of the first sale, as would prevent the operation of s. 313, Civ Pro. T, another creditor, obtained a decree against D on 9-10-1891 in a First-class Subordinate Court, and in execution thereof attached the same property on 14-8-1892. But the property having been sold on 17-8-1892 (the day fixed for sale) by the Second-class Subordinate Judge under the decree of S, T applied to the latter for setting aside the sale, contending that the sale was invalid under s. 285, Civ. (36)—Mortgage—Bond and warrant of attorney to enter up judgment give as collateral security—Seizure of property under fi-fa in execution of judgment—Equity of redemption not sale able under fi-fa—Subsisting of right of redemption.—Plaintiff sued to redeem a garden which was mortgaged by his father B in 1819 to the predecessor-in-title of the defendants. On the date of the mortgage, as a collateral security, gave a bond and a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment in the Supreme Court. Execution issued on this judgment; and, under a fi-fa, the property was seized and sold by the Sheriff and purchased by R brother of the original mortgagee. who got possession in 1821 under a bill of sale and continued ever since in possession. In 1865, the present suit was instituted to redeem upon the footing of the original mortgage. The plaintiff's case was that the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee still subsisted between the appellants and the respondents (the representatives of R and his brother the original mortgagee) and that much more than the mortgage-debt had been realised from the usufruct. The Principal Sudder Ameen found that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee between B and R, N ceased to exist from the date of the Sheriff's sale when the holders of the bond and warrant of attorney satisfied their debt and took possession of the garden and B received and appropriated the surplus proceeds of the sale. The question argued on special appeal was the same as that before the lower Court, viz., did the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee still subsist, or had the title of the mortgagee been exchanged for any other title, and, if so, when and how. Held that the right of redemption had not been lost, but still subsisted. At the time of the Sheriff's sale in 1821, an equity of redemption could not be seized and sold under a fi-fa, and therefore, nothing passed under the Sheriff's sale to R.N. R.N. no doubt was put in possession; but as he had no right to possession save as mortgagee, he must be deemed to have obtained and to

(1)—Application to sell immoveable property in execution setting aside deed of gift—Avoidance of deed of gift in suit by third party—Removal of obstruction to decree-holder to bring property to sale for debts under his decree.—The defendant in the present suit had obtained a decree against one J, and made a summary application in execution to have a gift executed by J in favour of the plaintiff's donor cancelled. Subsequently a third party who had sued to set the deed of gift aside succeeded on the ground that it was not bona fide. The obstruction being thus removed, the decree-holder petitioned to have the property sold in execution of the decree against J and succeeded. The present suit was thereon instituted by the plaintiff who was in possession to stay the order for sale in execution. The lower appellate Court having dismissed the suit, plaintiff appealed. But the High Court dismissed the appeal holding that the decree in favour of the third party had removed the obstruction to the decree-holder in bringing the property to sale as that of his judgment-debtor J, and the title deed of the plaintiff having been declared not to be a bona fide one, defendant might at once sell the property for the debt due to him. 1341 of 17*th June* 1842.— A decree-holder cannot first sell a decree, and then sue out execution upon it. Construction 1341 of 17th June 1842 no doubt makes it essential to the formal recognition by a Civil Court of the transfer of a decree that the transferrer should certify the fact to the Court ; and that until such fact be so certified, the originally recorded decree-holder alone can be regarded as the decree-holder who can properly execute the decree by sale or otherwise. But the construction was never intended to enable a person to commit a fraud by first selling a decree and then suing out execution upon it. SITARAM SAHAI v. MOHAN MANDAR, B.L.R. Sup. Vol. 345=3 W.R. 90. [R., 7 W.R. 360.]

(3)—Holder of money-decree, acquiescence of, in Court's order relating to sale—Duty to credit sale price to the decree.—In this case a creditor who had obtained a money-decree acquiesced in an order in execution made by the Court that, out of four villages, the property of his judgment-debtor, the two last should only be sold if the price of the two first fell short of the amount of his decree. The first two villages did sell for more than enough to satisfy the decree, but the creditor, having applied part of the sale price to clear that account, placed the other part to the credit of some old debts due to him by the judgment-debtor. Under these circumstances, it was held that the judgment-creditor had no right to get the last two villages sold in satisfaction of what remained of his debt. It was therefore not competent to the creditor to subsequently maintain a suit to have his lien declared upon the two other villages which, under the orders of the Court passed in his presence and with his acquiescence, could be liable only when the condition occurred that the decree was not satisfied by the sale of the two villages ordered to be first sold. MOONSHEE KALLY PERSHAD v. LALLAH BEHARY LAL, 4 W.R. 67. [R., 8 W.R. 379.]

(4)—Decree for possession of land — Immoveable property—Order setting aside sale of decree, not to be interfered with by appellate Court.—A decree for possession of land is a document convertible at the pleasure of the holder into land. Such a decree, therefore, is not of the nature of a 'moveable ;' it is the title-deed of an estate and, like all other similar muniments of title, is real or immoveable property. Consequently, the order of the first Court setting aside a sale under such a decree being final, it is not competent to the appellate Court to interfere with such order. MOBKOONISSA v. DEWAN ALI MISTREE, 4 W.R. Mis., 22.

enacted for the purpose of avoiding the inconvenience and hardship which might accrue to third parties in consequence of the sale of any property as the property of the judgment debtor, when the latter has got no possession in it, either actual or constructive. From the nature of the enquiry prescribed by the section and that of the order to be passed upon the result of such enquiry, this construction of the law appears to be perfectly correct. The validity or otherwise of the title set up by the claimant is not to be investigated directly. The question for adjudication of such a case is whether the judgment-debtor is in possession of the property attached for sale, actually or constructively ; and for the purpose of determining it, the claimant is to be placed in the category of a defendant. Where, therefore, the person who comes forward with the claim admits the debtor's possession of some share or interest, he thereby admits the very fact which it is the object of enquiry under the section to ascertain, and consequently it is then unnecessary for the Court to proceed to enquire into the claim. MISREE BEGUM v. PUNNOO SINGH, 8 W.R. 362.

(6)—Sale of estate in execution—Application by judgment-debtor for realization of debt from proceeds of another estate.—The Court will not prevent a decree-holder from enforcing his decree by sale of an estate, in which the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest, merely on the ground that the estate is entangled and that it would be more convenient to the judgment-debtor if the judgment-creditor should wait and receive his debt from the proceeds of another estate which is under attachment. NUJEEMOODDEEN AHMED v. ABDOOL AZEEZ, 11 W.R. 342.

(7)—Holder of two decrees—Attachment in satisfaction of first decree—Subsequent application for attachment for second decree—Fraud.—A decree-holder who, after having obtained two decrees against the same person, has attached certain property in execution of one decree, has a right to carry out the sale of that property, if, in the notification of sale, intending purchasers have been made aware of the fact that he likewise claims the same property in satisfaction of his second decree. that the prohibitory order, having been in accordance with the terms of s. 236, Act VIII of 1859, was legal and regular. The Court executing the defendant's decree ought not to have sold the plaintiff's decree, but should have under s. 243 appointed a manager to enforce the plaintiff's decree. A decree-holder must not be allowed to bid and purchase at a sale in execution of his decree without an order of Court previously obtained upon notice to the judgment-debtor. (10)—Execution of decree—Postponement of sales at judgment-debtor's request—No fresh notification—Validity of sale.—Where an execution sale was adjourned at the judgment-debtor's request and with his express consent that no fresh notification was necessary, the sale that took place on the adjourned date cannot be questioned by him on the ground of material irregularity in not publishing the notification. BAMA SOONDUREE CHOWDHRAIN v. SARODA SOONDUREE DOSSEE, 18 W. R. 511.

(15)—Dispossession of person in possession of property by auction-purchaser—Remedy under the Civ. Pro. Code of 1877—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 165.—Under the Civ. Pro. Code of 1877, there was no provision corresponding to that in s. 269 of the repealed Code of 1859, enabling the Court, executing a decree, to enquire into a complaint by a party having no connection with the judgment-debtor, on the ground of dispossession in the delivery of possession to the execution purchaser; his remedy in such a case was only by regular suit. HARASATOOLLAH v. BROJONATH GHOSE, 3 C. 729=1 C.L.R. 317.

(16)—Lapse of time between proclamation and actual sale of property.—On an adjournment (not de die in diem) of a Court sale, after several previous postponements, by the Court itself on its own motion, the rule that thirty days should elapse between the proclamation and the sale must, in the absence of waiver by the debtor, be strictly complied with, though such last adjournment might be to the debtor's benefit. HARBUNS SAHAI v. BHAIRO PERSHAD SINGH, 5 C. 259=4 C.L.R. 23. (18 W.R. 347, D.)

(17)—Execution sale—Material irregularity in proclamation of sale—Substantial injury—Presumption.—Substantial injury cannot be presumed from the fact of a material irregularity in the proclamation of an execution-sale, though, on proof of both the injury and the irregularity, the Court will presume the injury to be due to the irregularity. Such a superior Court, when the property is attempted to be brought to sale in pursuance of its own attachment, would be acting with discretion by refusing to re-sell the property and by sending for the assets realised by the inferior Court, for rateable distribution in such superior Court. S. 18 of the Limitation Act does not apply to a case in which the fraud is antecedent to the accrual of the right. (36 C. 654, 17 B. 341, R.) Held, that s. 18 can apply only to such fraud as amounts to concealment and is intended to keep from the injured party the knowledge of the wrong or its remedy. The section therefore can have no application where the fraud alleged by a party applying to set aside an execution sale is under-statement of the value of the properties in the sale proclamation. The burden of proving fraud lies on the applicant. Semble.—An application to set aside on the ground of fraud, an execution sale held prior to the coming into operation of Act IX of 1908 will be governed by art. 166 of sch. I of that Act, if made after that Act came into operation. S. 6 of the General Clauses Act does not preserve the right the applicant had to apply within three years from the date of the sale. (35)—Decree-holders purchasing at execution-sales—Purchase subject to final result of litigation—Object of rule.—Though in the case of third parties purchasing at execution sales, the subsequent reversal or modification of the decree or order under which the sale took place does not affect their rights, it is otherwise in the case of decree-holders themselves purchasing, and in their case, the purchase is subject to the final result of the litigation between them and their judgment-debtors. The object of the rule, is so far as it relates to judgment-creditors, is apparently to prevent the interests of the judgment-debtors suffering by sales of their property before their liability is finally determined, and to avoid judgment-creditors profiting at the expense of their debtors by becoming purchasers in sales pending litigation by way of appeal. Quære :—Whether the decree-holder purchaser should be treated as if he held a charge upon what he purchased for what was ultimately found due to him. (38)—Successive sales in execution of decrees—Priority—Confirmation—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 11, 320.—Three persons obtained decrees against the same person, for the enforcement of hypothecation against the same property. The execution of these decrees was transferred to the Collector under s. 320, Civ. Pro. Code. The decree were, in order of date, those of M. S. and B respectively First, the property was sold in execution of S's decree and was purchased by S and D. After this, but on the same day, the same property was put up again for sale, in execution of B's decree and purchased by A. It was then put up a third time for sale in execution of M's decree and purchased by G. A subsequently allowed his earnest money to become forfeited. The Deputy Collector confirmed the last sale on the ground that M's decree being first in date, the lien held by him was entitled to priority over the other liens. The other purchasers objected to the confirmation of sale but their objections were disallowed. An appeal from this order was preferred to the Deputy Commissioner who set aside the order confirming the sale and confirmed the prior sale in favour of D and S. G then brought a suit in the Civil Court praying that the Commissioner's order might be set aside and that the sale in his favour might be confirmed. Held (1) that a suit of such a nature would lie in the Civil Court and (2) that the first purchasers at the sale held under the Collector's order were the only possible purchasers at the sale, that to confirm the sale to the plaintiff would be a manifest injustice, that the sale to the plaintiff could not be confirmed and that, therefore, the suit should be dismissed. proceedings, of a decree, charging lands for its satisfaction, held by the judgment-debtor, is a sale of an interest in immoveable property. [D., 15 A. 134; R., 9 M. 5, 10 M. 169.] Sales in execution proceedings, of decrees charging lands, are governed by the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code, relating to sales of immoveable property. (41)—Sale in execution of decree—Warranty of title.—In execution-sales of rights and interests in immoveable property, the extent and nature of the interest of the judgment-debtor, as described in the revenue registers, are notified at the time of sale, but the descriptions so given are neither intended by the decree-holder or the officer conducting the sale, nor taken by the auction-purchasers, to convey any warranty of the correctness of the description of such interest or any warranty of the extent and nature of such interest. Where, therefore, in such a case, the sons of the judgment-debtor obtained a decree against the auction-purchaser for the recovery of their interests in the property sold, he could not, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the decree-holder, or anything to show that an express or implied warranty of title was given by him, maintain a suit against the decree-holder for the refund of the purchase-money proportionate to the interests in the property recovered from him. (42)—*Sale in execution of decrees of several Courts—Civ. Pro. Pro. Code, did not give the Subordinate Judge any jurisdiction to deal with the sale in respect of the decree passed by the District Munsif; nor was there anything in that section to prevent the Munsif from confirming the sale in respect of the decree passed by him, by reason of the fact that a Court of a higher grade had set aside the sale. Per Oldfield, J.—It was doubtful whether the Munsif had jurisdiction to confirm the sale; but the Subordinate Judge must have intended to set aside the sale only in respect of the decree passed by him: and, his order setting aside the whole sale being illegal, and the Munsif's order having done substantial justice, there was no reason to interfere. The provisions of ss. 365 and 366 of the Civ. Pro. Code do not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree where a sole judgment-creditor dies. Per Spankie, J.—Though his death does not render the sale invalid, the confirmation of it without bringing the representatives on the record under ss. 365 and 366 of the Civ. Pro. Code, is improper. Per Pearson, J.—As an application for execution abates after the death of the decree-holder if not prosecuted by his legal representatives, a sale under such circumstances is improper and invalid, and the order confirming it should be set aside. Where, therefore, the same property was purchased by two different persons in executions of two different decrees against the same judgment-debtor, and while the prior purchaser applied for and got a sale certificate in respect of his purchase only after the same was obtained by the later purchaser, held that the prior purchaser had obtained an equitable interest in the property although he had not obtained a sale certificate, and that the later purchaser, therefore, must be held to have purchased the property subject to such equitable interest; and that the prior purchaser, having subsequently completed his title by obtaining the sale-certificate, was entitled to recover possession from the later purchaser. The defendant who claimed as a previous purchaser in execution had obtained a certificate in 1875 and was put into possession by the Court, though the certificate was not registered. Held, following 10 B. 453, that the defendant had acquired, under Act VIII of 1859, a complete interest in the property, by the previous sale to him and confirmation of it, and, the plaintiff by his subsequent purchase took only subject to such interest. Though there was no direct evidence of the confirmation of the sale to the defendant, yet the grant of a second certificate to him and its registration was held to be sufficient proof of such confirmation. It was also urged that, as the defendant was the holder of the decree in execution of which the property was sold, he took nothing by the purchase, having regard to s. 294 of the Civ. Pro. Code, but it was held that such a purchase would not be void ab initio but only voidable "on the application of the judgment-debtor or other person interested in the sale" as provided for in the latter part of the section. Plaintiff, as purchaser of K's share in the vatan at the sale in execution of the decree, sued the defendants, her co-sharers, to recover the profits of her share which had been collected by them. (52)—Execution of decree—Sale of moveable property—Place where sale must take place generally—Appeal — Parties to appeal.—The Civ. Pro. Code intends that a sale of moveable property in execution of a decree should ordinarily be held at some place within the jurisdiction of the Court ordering the sale. Good and sufficient reasons ought to be shown for directing otherwise. Where a fair sale could be had within the jurisdiction of the Court which executes the decree, the mere fact that a higher price is likely to be bid by holding the sale at a place outside the jurisdiction of the Court, is no reason for deviating from the ordinary rule. The widow of a deceased judgment-debtor preferred an appeal against an order made against her (as representative of her deceased husband) in execution of the decree. One X applied to the Court to make him a party to the appeal, alleging that he was the adopted son of the deceased. The widow denied the adoption and opposed his application. Held that X may be made a co-appellant with the widow if the decree-holder consented as it would tend to his own security, irrespective of whether X was or was not the adopted son of the deceased judgment-debtor. Pro. Code*, 1882, s. 305 (O. 21, r. 83, New Code).—P obtained a decree against V in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at S. He applied for execution, but V, on 19th April, 1893, obtained permission under s. 305, Civ. Pro. Code, to raise the amount of the decree by private sale on or before the 6th June, 1893, the day fixed for the sale of the lands attached in execution. She obtained a certificate of leave under s. 305. Another decree was obtained against her in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at B by A who also attached the same in lands in execution. From the Court at B however, V also obtained a certificate under s. 305, Civ. Pro. Code, on 22nd April, 1893, authorizing private sale. On the strength of these two certificates, V sold the lands under attachment to the applicant C for Rs. 2,000 by deed dated 25th May 1893. On the 20th June, 1893, C produced the deed in the Court at B and applied for confirmation of the sale as required by s. 305, Civ. Pro. Code. He asked that the purchase money paid by him should be distributed as follows : viz., Rs. 518-14-2 in satisfaction of the decree of the Court at B, Rs. 128-7-10 in satisfaction of the decree of the Court at S. and Rs. 1,352-10-3 for payment to V. The Court at B confirmed the sale, and ordered that the above sum of Rs. 128-7-10 should be paid into the Court at S. On 17th July, 1893, C applied to the Court at S to confirm the sale, which had already been confirmed by the Court at B, and he brought into Court the said sum of Rs. 128-7-10. On 19th June, 1893, while the above proceedings were going on, a third decree-holder (the opponent) had applied to the Court at S for execution of his decree. He objected to the private sale being confirmed, contending that the whole money realized had not been produced in Court. The Court allowed the objection and rejected the application to confirm the sale. The applicant then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction. Held that the application to the Court at S for the confirmation of the sale under s. 305, Civ. Pro. Code, was superfluous and ought to have been rejected on the ground that, as the sale had already been confirmed by a competent Court, there remained nothing more to be done in regard to it. Code, to recover from the defendants the purchase money which the plaintiff had paid at a Court sale for the purchase of property to which the judgment-debtor had no title. In this case, the District Judge had dismissed this suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation, taking the cause of action to arise on the date when it was found by the decree that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property ; but the High Court reversed his decree, being of opinion that the cause of action under the section does not accrue till the purchaser is deprived of the property sold to him. The double event must occur before he can sue :—(1) the property must be found not to have belonged to the judgment-debtor and (2) the purchaser must be deprived of it, and till the latter event occurs, the cause of action will not have completely accrued. (56)—Decree —Execution —Court-sale—Suit by auction-purchaser for refund of purchase-money on failure of consideration—Maintainability of the suit—Civ. Pro. Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Suit whether cognizable by Small Causes Court—Second appeal.—The plaintiff, an auction purchaser at a Court sale, on finding that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, filed a suit to recover possession of the property, or, in the alternative, to obtain refund of the purchase-money on the footing of a total failure of consideration. The failure of consideration alleged was that the trust-deed, under which the judgment-debtor was stated to have an interest in the property sold, had not been stamped. It was objected that the suit would not lie: Held, that the right of the plaintiff to maintain the suit was made clear by the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code in the manner indicated in (17 M. 228, R.) Held, also, that the trust-deed not having been duly stamped could not be admitted in evidence (s. 35 of the Stamp Act, 1899); and that it must, therefore, be taken to be non-existent. Held, further that the purchaser had been caused, however innocently, to make a mistake as to the substance of the thing which was the subject of the sale. He was led to believe that he was purchasing a right under a trust-deed, whereas, so far as it appeared from the facts proved, no trust-deed was in existence. There had, therefore, been an entire failure of consideration. Under the Civ. Pro. Code a warranty of some saleable interest, when the right, title and interest of a judgment-debtor is put up for sale, is implied, and the purchaser's right based thereon to a return under certain conditions of the purchase-money which has been received by the judgment-creditor is recognised. The liability of the judgment-creditor under the circumstances to refund the purchase-money which has been paid to him at a Court-sale being thus established, there can be no objection to treating the relations of the parties, namely, the judgment-creditor and the Court-sale purchaser, as relations in the nature of contract. On second appeal a preliminary objection was taken that, as the amount decreed in respect of purchase-money and interest in the first Court amounted to less than Rs. 500, no second appeal lay: Held, overruling the objection, that the claim was not only for money, but also for possession, and, therefore, the suit was not as framed cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. judgment-debtor applied to the Court to set aside the sale on the following grounds:—viz., that the amount of the incumbrance to which the property was liable was incorrectly stated in the proclamation of sale, that the proclamation of sale did not state the hour of sale and that it incorrectly stated the gross profits of the property. In support of his objections he summoned their witnesses one of whom was examined by the Court and the other two were absent. The Court made the following note "there are no more witnesses" and refused to adjourn the hearing of the case in order to re-summon and examine the remaining witnesses. In deciding the case the Court held with reference to Select Case No. 188 that the judgment-debtor could not be permitted, after the sale had taken place, to object to the contents of the proclamation of sale, as he must have known before the sale took place what the proclamation contained, and should therefore have objected to its contents before the sale. Held, that the Court was wrong in holding that the judgment-debtor could not be permitted to take objections to the sale founded on the contents of the sale proclamation, because he might have objected to them before the sale and did not do so. The Court misinterpreted Select Case No. 188 which followed the decision of the Privy Council (in 12 M. 19), and which did not lay down that a judgment-debtor cannot object to a sale which has taken place on the ground of alleged misdescription of the property in the sale proclamation, if he could have taken such objection before the sale. Held further, that, inasmuch as did not appear that the failure of the witnesses to attend was due to any want of diligence on the part of the judgment-debtor, the Court should not have refused to adjourn the hearing of the case, and that the judgment-debtor was entitled to have his witnesses examined. encumbrance of Rs. 10.000 under the two deeds of 1896, above-mentioned: As a matter of fact the mortgage of August 21st, 1896, had been paid off and only a sum of Rs. 5,543 was due on account of the mortgage of July 4th, 1896. After the sale the defendant was in due course put in possession of the property sold. In the present suit, the plaintiff, son of C, claimed redemption of the mortgage of July 4th, 1896, contending that the sale of the village G was not binding upon him inasmuch as at the time of sale the mortgage of August 1896 had been paid off and defendant having taken an advantage of this fact was a trustee of the village for him or at least of the benefit improperly obtained by him. The defendant contended that the sale was binding upon the plaintiff. It was proved that the mortgage of August 1896 has been paid off and that the village G was not worth more than Rs. 20,000. Held, that the defendant, having purchased the property for Rs. 14,633 with an encumbrance of Rs. 5,543, had paid almost the full value of the property, and had not therefore obtained by his purchase any benefit of which he should be considered a trustee for the plaintiff. Held, further, that a purchaser at an execution sale cannot avoid his purchase merely because charges not entered in the sale statement are found to be enforceable against the property, nor is such a purchaser bound to admit the existence or validity of charges, merely because they are entered in the sale statement. Pro. Code, the provision in the section was not retro-active so as to subject a decree-holder who brought the property to sale under Act VIII of 1859 to a liability towards the auction-purchaser to which he was not subject at the time of the sale. In May, 1877, when the plaintiff became auction-purchaser of property attached at the defendant's instance, the rule of law was that the auction-purchaser bought at his own risk, and, if he got nothing for his money the decree-holder who did no wrong in having taken the money out of Court, was not liable. ——6.—Sale of Goods.

(1)—Sale of goods by description—Purchaser's right to reject—Transfer of ownership in the goods, question of—Contract for purchase of goods or part by description—Acceptance of part only—Remedy of seller.—Under the law in India, a man is not bound, unless he has altered his position by some conduct of his own, to accept and to pay for goods which are not in accordance with the description of the goods he bargained for; and such right to reject the goods is quite independent of the question whether the property in the goods has passed to the buyer or not. [R., 2 L.B.R. 91.] Where a contract was not an absolute contract for the purchase of five bales of goods, but for the purchase of "the goods or any part thereof that may be in a merchantable condition," and the purchaser took delivery of one bale and paid for it, but refused to take delivery of the remaining four bales as not being according to the contract, held, under the circumstances of the case, the transaction with regard to each bale must be a separate transaction, and that the property never passed to the purchaser except in the one bale delivered and taken. A suit, if one lay, would lie, not for the price of the four bales, but for damages for refusing to accept them, the measure of damages being the difference between the contract and the market price. (3)—Goods priced in sterling—Money paid in rupees, how far payment for goods—Sale of goods—Unpaid vendor—Stoppage in transit—Notice to agent—Bombay Act VI of 1879, ss. 43, 62 — Bye-laws of Port Trust Rule 59.—The argument that money paid in rupees is not and cannot be payment for goods priced in sterling is untenable. Payment may be made in any medium which the parties mutually agree to give and accept. It is clear law that a wrongful delivery of goods by the carrier after notice to stop in transit does not defeat the right of the unpaid vendor (Sett v. Cowley, 7 Taunt. 169, R.) Notice to stop in transit given to the agent is equivalent to a notice to the master (Kemp v. Falk, 7 Ap. Cas. at p. 585, R.) According to Bombay Act VI of 1879, if goods are landed at a wharf of the Port Trust Board, the wharfingers are placed in the same position as the master and have to make delivery according to the exigencies of the bill of lading handed to them duly endorsed. As long as the goods are subject to a stop order for freight, the bill of lading has not discharged its office, and the goods are subject to incidents arising out of the original contract contained in the bill of lading. So long as they are subject to a lien for freight, the transit has not ended and the goods are not at home. When the ship-owner lands the goods under the statute, and his freight has been paid, his right of control and lien over the goods is gone, and thenceforth the goods are held by the statutable wharfingers for the consignee alone. Rule 59 of the Bye-laws of the Port Trust was not intended to have, and has not, any effect on the rights of consignees but is merely a departmental rule to prevent servants of the Board from delivering goods subject to the master's lien. (5)—Contract to supply goods—Sub-contract to make and deliver goods in batches to the contractor—Contract between contractor and sub-contractor whether entire or separate as to each batch—Inferior work not according to pattern—Reduction of Price.—Plaintiff in this case claimed for the work which he had done for the defendant, who was himself under a contract with Government for the supply of doors and door frames with reference to the making of which there was a sub-contract between the plaintiff and the defendant. Some of the batches of doors supplied by defendant through plaintiff had been of inferior quality. But defendant had paid him the price of every batch except the last, the subject-matter of the present claim, the entire price of which was retained and withheld by the defendant because Government had rejected the door-work delivered over by the defendant as being of inferior quality, and the defendant had been put to expense in making good the deficient quality. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that his contract with the plaintiff was an entire one, that, as plaintiff knew that defendant was under a distinct contract with Government, the requirements of Government must furnish the measure of damages. Held that the separate delivery and settlement of price in respect of each batch severed the batch, and the contract under these circumstances cannot be considered an entire one. If the contract were general or entire, the cost to the defendant in putting the work into the state required by Government, or the Government deduction, could not afford the measure of the reduction to be made. By the defendant's own act (assuming the work to have been inferior to warranty or pattern) it was not in the present stage competent for the Court to arrive at any proper finding with regard to the reduction to be made. (6)—Sale of goods—Beer—Implied warranty of fitness at time of supply—No warranty for any period after delivery—Challenge by buyer not to be delayed—Estoppel by acts of buyer.—The plaintiffs sued for the price of a quantity of beer sold to the defendants. The beer was delivered to defendants early in February 1869 and the whole consignment reached them in or before the middle of March. The defendants advertised the beer they had purchased to be of superior quality, after thay had received it, and continued to do so till the date of this suit. A large quantity of beer was bottled off as the purchasers considered it sufficiently good for bottling. It was not until April that the defendants, owing to a quarrel with the plaintiffs, refused payment on the ground that the beer was bad on arrival and not merchantable in that it was not fit for the purpose for which it was intended, viz., to be kept for a reasonable time and re-sold. They contended that by law there is an implied warranty to that effect on the part of the plaintiffs. Held, that the plaintiffs were bound to supply wholesome and merchantable beer to the defendants, but they were not responsible for any deterioration that may have necessarily taken place between the date of despatch and the date of delivery, and that there is no implied warranty on the part of brewers that the beer supplied by them shall keep good for any period after delivery. When the brewer supplies beer of a fair and merchantable and wholesome quality, he has fulfilled the obligation imposed on him by law. Held also that the buyer was bound, in order to avail himself of a warranty, to challenge the quality of the article without unreasonable delay, for, if the challenge be unreasonably delayed, the legitimate inference is that the buyer was satisfied. If the buyer break bulk or make use of it, he is barred from raising any objection to it, and immediate inspection is more necessary when the article purchased may alter by keeping. Held also that, as the defendants, perfectly well aware of the perishable nature of the beer in question, accepted the beer consigned to them, puffed it up in a most glowing manner, sold a large quantity of it and never said a word about its bad quality until they quarrelled with the plaintiffs, they had by their own acts shown that they had no reasonable ground of refusal to pay. One of the grounds for the application was that the contract of purchase and sale in question was voidable at the option of the petitioner on the ground of misrepresentation and fraudulent concealment, on the part of A, of the true state of the Bank's affairs. A denied that there was any misrepresentation or concealment by which the petitioner was induced to take shares, and averred that the petitioner well knew the embarrassed condition of the Bank and with full knowledge purchased the shares in question. The lower Courts found that there was no fraudulent concealment by which the purchaser's consent to take shares was induced, but that he purchased with knowledge sufficient to disentitle him to relief. The purchaser was bound to make cautious inquiry before he rushed into connection with an institution which, to his knowledge, had made losses amounting to one-third of its entire capital. The Chief Court held that, though it was unable to agree with the lower Courts in holding that the contract was ab initio valid, and never at any time voidable, the lower Courts were right in having proceeded on the ground that the contract had been affirmed and validated by the purchaser's subsequent conduct. It is the general rule of law that a person who has been induced to enter into a contract voidable on the ground of fraud may rescind the contract within a reasonable time after discovering the fraud. The contract continues valid till the party defrauded has determined his election by avoiding it, and, if a party once determines his election, it is determined for ever. In the present case, the legal fraud being the non-disclosure of the material facts known to the sellers at the time of the sale and purchase of the shares, if the facts so withheld had also come to the knowledge of the purchaser, and he did, after a reasonable time, by express words or acts, signify his determination to affirm the purchase, the contract would have ceased to be voidable and the property in the shares would have vested in him absolutely. It was found that the plaintiff, after becoming aware of the facts withheld from him, had voted at meetings of the shareholders and taken part in the direction and management of the Bank's affairs—acts for the performance of which the possession of a certain number of shares in the Bank was a necessary qualification. Held that the plaintiff had, by such conduct, signified his determination to affirm the purchase of the shares, and his claim to have his name removed from the list of contributories in respect of such shares was therefore rightly dismissed. or the Legislature changes it. The island of Salsette was conquered from the Marathas by the British in 1774 and the law of succession for the Christian inhabitants of the island remained unaltered until the passing of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865). Until that Act was passed, the law of primogeniture was not in force among the Christian inhabitants of Salsette. In the absence of a widow and daughter, the sons took the property of their father in equal shares. Quære, whether they did so under the Hindu law or the Portuguese law or by force of usage existing among them? One Antonio, a Christian inhabitant of Salsette, died in the year 1846 leaving considerable immoveable property and three sons, viz., Pedro, Minguel and Enos. The family had been originally a Hindu family. In 1875, the eldest son, Pedro, mortgaged the family property in dispute to one D. The mortgage-deed was attested by Enos, who died in the year 1876. Minguel died in 1883, having made a will by which he left the property to Pedro's son, the present plaintiff. In that year (1883), the mortgagee filed a suit on the mortgage against Pedro alone and obtained a decree which he afterwards assigned to the defendant. In execution of the decree the defendant sold the property in dispute at a Court-sale and purchased it himself. The plaintiff (son of Pedro the mortgagor) now sued to redeem the property, and the questions arose (1) whether under the law applicable to the Christian inhabitants of Salsette the eldest brother Pedro had succeeded on the father's death to the whole of the family property, and (2) if not, then, to what extent the mortgage in question bound the property of the family. Held, (1) that the law of primogeniture did not prevail among the Christian inhabitants of Salsette prior to the passing of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), and that Pedro, although eldest son, had not succeeded to the whole of the family property. He and his brothers took equal shares in the property of their father; (2) that the mortgage by Pedro had been authorized by the family and was for family purposes and was binding on the family property. Although Pedro and his brothers could not be regarded as co-parceners under Hindu law, yet, having regard to the fact that the Christian inhabitants of Salsette were for the most part descendants of converts from Hinduism among whom Hindu usages prevailed to a large extent, the Court would not require the same direct proof of the authority of the manager of the family to mortgage the paternal estate under his management as it would be required in the case of an English manager under similar circumstances. The Court would treat it much in the same way as if the family were still a Hindu family; (3) that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem. What was intended to be sold at the Court auction was the whole interest in the mortgaged property. The defendant purchased that interest subject to the right of the plaintiff to show that his interest derived from Minguel was not bound by the mortgage.

This he had failed to do. Salvage.

(1)—Right to salvage for services in land waters—Salvors' lien on goods saved until payment of salvage.—Salvage is the compensation allowed to persons by whose assistance a ship or boat, or the cargo of a ship or the lives of the persons belonging to her, are saved from danger or loss, in case of shipwreck, derelict, capture, or the like. A claim to salvage is founded on a principle of equity which the Courts of British India are bound to recognize, and it accrues irrespectively of the circumstance that the rescue is from a danger incurred on inland waters, or of the circumstance that a portion of the services may be rendered from the shore. In order to support a claim for salvage, there must be usually skill, enterprise and risk on the part of the salvors, and peril with respect to the property saved. It has been held that where the owner of a ship discharges the claim of salvors, both in respect of the ship and cargo, he has a lien on cargo for the rateable portion of the salvage. So far as the salvors are concerned, it is difficult to understand on what principle a distinction could be taken between the liability of the owner of the cargo for the service rendered in saving the cargo, and the liability of the owner of the vessel for the services rendered in saving the vessel. The right of lien of the salvors on the property saved rests on the principle of equity that when persons have expended money or labour on goods, for which expenditure they have a right of suit against the owner, they are, in the absence of any special agreement to the contrary, entitled to retain the goods till their just claims are satisfied. Persons to whom (in these provinces) a right to salvage has accrued, are entitled to retain the property saved until a reasonable sum has been paid or tendered to them in satisfaction of their claim. Though the salvors are bound at the earliest moment clearly to inform the owner of the goods saved, of their claim, still they do not lose their lien by their omission to give immediate notice. If the owner has tendered the salvors a sum as salvage, and the latter refuse, and the sum tendered has, in the opinion of the Court, been a reasonable sum for the satisfaction of the claim,

the owner would be entitled to damages for the detention subsequent to the tender. GILMORE v. ROSE, 6 N.W.P. 311.

(2)—Suit to recover value of wrecked property—Property given to actual salvors—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 27—Special appeal.—Plaintiff, farmer of an estate from Government, stated that a boat containing a large quantity of rice having been wrecked at a certain spot, 400 maunds of the rice cargo recovered had been left by the owner on the river bank for the remuneration of the salvors. A portion of this rice having been left as huk-zemindary, the defendants as owners of the neighbouring jote, claiming to be entitled to the rice, had carried it away. In this suit for the recovery of the value of the rice so carried away, the first Court went into the question of the custom entitling the zemindar to property saved, and found it in the affirmative. The lower appellate Court, however, found that there was no such custom, and dismissed the suit. On special appeal by plaintiff, defendant took the preliminary objection that the special appeal was barred by s. 27 of Act XXIII of 1861. Plaintiff contended that the suit involved the trial of questions of right beyond the cognizance of Courts of Small causes. Held that the suit was simply a suit for the value of moveable property, the question of rights being only incidentally raised. The suit was therefore of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and the value being less than Rs. 500, there could be no special appeal in the case. MR. THOMAS GRANT v. MODHOO SOODUN SINGH, 10 W.R. 79.

(3)—Derelict—Principle of salvage compensation.—The fact that the subject of a salvage is a derelict does not carry with it a right to remuneration consisting of a half, a third or any specific proportion of the property salved. (The Janet Court, L.R. (1897) P.D. 59, R.) Salvage is not always a mere compensation for work and labour. The interests of commerce, the benefit and security of navigation, the lives of the seamen, render it proper to estimate a salvage reward upon a more enlarged and liberal scale. The ingredients of a salvage service are, first, enterprise in the salvors risking their own lives to save their fellow-creatures and to rescue the property of their fellow-creatures; secondly, the degree of danger and distress from which the property is rescued —whether it were in imminent peril or almost certainly lost; thirdly, the degree of labour and skill which the salvors incurred and displayed and the time occupied; and lastly the value. THE CLAN LINE STEAMERS v. THE BALCES, 27 M. 187.

(4)—Salvage — Services entitling vessel to salvage—Towage.—Where a ship is in a condition of actual peril, and the services of a tug are sought for and directed to the purpose of releasing her from that condition, such services are salvage services. But where there is nothing in those services as regards risk or exertion or other conduct of the salvors to make them differ from ordinary towage services, their reward should be estimated as for towage with salvage liberality. In the matter of the ALABAMA, 2 Ind. Jur. N.S. 139.

(5)—Towage leading to rescue of vessel—Salvage compensation, rules of estimate and apportionment of.—A towage service is where one vessel is employed merely to expedite the progress of another and where the towage leads to the rescue of a vessel in danger, it should be remunerated as salvage. Salvage compensation is not always to be calculated as a mere compensation for work and labour. The interests of commerce, the benefit and security of navigation and the lives of the seamen, render it proper to estimate a salvage-reward upon a highly enlarged and liberal scale. Nor is such reward to be estimated with reference to the value of the ship salved. With regard to the apportionment of the salvage amount, the rules have greatly changed since the introduction of steam-ships. The services rendered are (save in exceptional cases) held to be more due to the steam power than to any personal efforts and, consequently the owners, as compared to the captain and crew, are rewarded on a much higher scale than they were in the days of sailing ships. FRANCIS JOHN RAFFIN v. THE S. S. CHILKA, 7 B. 196. [R., 27 M. 187.]

(6)—Value of salvage service—Principle of estimation.—In estimating the value of salvage services, the Court is bound to weigh and consider the time, the labour, the skill and enterprise of the salvors, the risk incurred by them and the value of the property engaged in the salvage service on the one hand, and, on the other, the degree of danger from which the property is rescued and the value of that property. The great power possessed by steam boats of rendering services with rapidity entitles them to a higher rate of reward than other vessels. THE LADY JOCELYN, 2 M.H.C. 355.

(7)—Salvage—Goods put on flat during squall.—A dinghee laden with gilders valued at Rs. 20,000 was being propelled across the river when, a squall coming on and the dinghee being in some danger, the gilders were taken on board a flat for safety and kept there till the squall subsided. Held that the owners of the flat had no claim for salvage, and that Rs. 150 was a fair remuneration for services rendered. URNA CHURN CHETTY v. GORDON, 1 Hyde 212.

(8)—Principles governing right to salvage remuneration—Accidental interruption, effect of—Salvage and towage, distinction between—Towage converted into salvage service, when—Forfeiture of salvage right—Principle of assessing award—Practice of Courts in awarding costs—Consolidation of claims.—Any service rendered to a vessel in a state of peril or risk, or otherwise in distress, which contributes in some degree to its ultimate safety, entitles the person rendering the service to salvage award. The mere fact that the service was interrupted by accident or some like cause, if it has been productive of benefit to the owners, will not disentitle the salvors from their reward. It is not necessary that the distress should be actual or immediate, or that the danger should be imminent and absolute. It will be sufficient, if, at the time the assistance is rendered, the ship has encountered any damage or misfortune which possibly expose her to destruction, if the services were not rendered. Where a ship is in a normal condition, and has received no injury, and nothing more is needed than expedition or acceleration of progress, that is towage; but salvage is service rendered to a ship in peril or risk or in distress, which contributes to the ultimate recovery of the same. So, in considering the question, whether the service was of the nature of salvage service, the risks of navigation, the difficulty under which it was performed, and the danger in performing it, have all to be taken into consideration. Mere towage service, or, as it is sometimes called, an ordinary towage service, may, in consequence of supervenient danger, be converted into salvage service. But the right to salvage may be wholly or partially forfeited by improper abandonment or by wilful misconduct or gross negligence on the part of the salvors. Not only the danger and difficulties to which the salvor was exposed, but also, the skill in the performance of the work, must be considered by a Court, while assessing the award. Extraordinary skill and labour may often be inferred from the shortness of service. The promovents have a right to separate costs, in a case in which two separate salvage claims are consolidated, and no order is made giving the conduct of both to one plaintiff. Following the practice of the Court, costs given on the ordinary scale provided for in the rules in accordance with the Civ. Pro. Code. In the matter of THE STEAMSHIP "THE DRACHENFELS," 27 C. 860.

(9)—Action of salvage—Arrest of ship—Bail excessive—Increase of award in appeal.—Where, in an action of salvage, a ship was arrested and the bail asked for was found to be excessive, held, that the impugnants should be paid by the promovents the costs of the excessive bail required from them. Sanad.

See GRANT—CONSTRUCTION.

(1)—Hindu Law—Widow's estate— Sanad, construction of.—In April 1861 the Chief Commissioner of Oudh granted a sanad in the following terms:—"It having been established after due inquiry that five persons specified herein held 48¾ acres in rent-free tenure under the former Government, the Chief Commissioner is pleased to maintain that tenure for the lives of the incumbents after whose death it will be resumed." C was the widow of one of the 5 grantees. Held, that the sanad simply established the status quo ante as contemplated by the law for the time being in force, and that C had only the estate of a Hindu widow under that document. NANDA v. BHAWANI SARAN, 3 O.C. 250.

(2)—Male heirs—Construction.—A sanad under which the Government agreed to continue a vatan to a family contained a clause which ran as follows:—"The said lands and cash allowances shall be continued without demand of service, and without increase of Land Tax over the above fixed amounts, and without objection or question on the part of Government as to the rights of any holders thereof, so long as any male heir to the vatan, lineal, collateral or adopted, within the limits of the Vatandar family, shall be in existence." Held, on a construction of the above clause that it does not limit the succession to male heirs only, because it merely relates to the continuance of inheritance in force in the family of the vatandar. GOVIND v. SITABAI, 2 Bom. L.R. 23.

(3)—Construction of Sanad—"Heirs."—The word "heirs", used in the Sanad, was construed to mean heirs of the grantee according to the ordinary rules of inheritance of the Hindu law. (4)—Construction of Sanad—'Sontan,' meaning of—Male progeny—"Sreni Krame," meaning of—Succession—Gift to A and children of her womb—Construction—Life interest.—The word 'sontan' bears the wider and more general meaning of issue, and is not confined to male progeny only. [R., 7 C.L J. 291.] The true meaning of the words 'Sreni Krame' in a sunnad as gathered from the context seems to be "in succession" in the sense of succession first of mother, and then of the children born of her womb. Where by its terms a sunnad determines with the life of a Hindu widow and the children born of her womb, the gift necessarily becomes the gift, not of an absolute estate, but of a life interest only. She can make no disposition of this property after her death and if she makes a testamentary disposition of it, the will becomes inoperative and will be of no legal effect. HURISH CHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. CHUNDER MONEE DEBIA, 24 W.R. 268.

(5)—Sunnad, construction of — Impartible zemindari—Partition—Succession by widow.—The owner of an impartible zemindari which, though forming part of the family property, had, by ancient custom, been held and enjoyed by the eldest male member in the direct line, died leaving four sons and an infant grandson A by his eldest son who had predeceased him. During the minority of that grandson, the four surviving sons executed a sunnad which, after reciting certain arrangements made by their father, directed that "the zemindari should be held by A, the son of the eldest son. A and we four also shall take in equal shares the inam lands; until A attains his proper age, we all should jointly manage the affairs of the said zemindari. After A attains his proper age, the zemindari of the inam lands allotted to him should be delivered over to him, and each should confine himself to the share allotted to him." Certain jewellery was also divided in similar manner. A died leaving a son C, who died in 1865 without issue but leaving a widow. Held (reversing the decision of the High Court of Madras), that the sunnad amounted to an agreement by which the joint family was divided, and that on the death of C, his widow was entitled to the zemindari. VADREVU RANGANAYAKAMMA v. VADREVU BULLI RAMAIYA, 5 C.L.R. 439, P.C. (5 I.A. 61, Cited.)

(6)—Construction of Sunnad—"Mokurrary", meaning of.—The word "Mokurrary," in a sunnud, does not necessarily import "perpetuity." THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL v. NAWAB JAFUR HOSSEIN KHAN, 5 M.I.A. 467=1 Sar. 472.

(7)—Construction of—Mokarari, grant of—Revision of rent, if in perpetuity—Set off—Res judicata—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 13—Non-realization of rent for many years, effect of—Landlord and tenant—Batta, agreement to pay, if and when legal.—On the construction of the sanad, which recited that, by a previous grant, Rs. 72 had been fixed as the annual horse expenses of the lessee to be paid out of mokarari rent of Rs. 250, and as the lessee had with the consent of the donor taken a transfer of the mokarari interest, the sum of Rs. 72 was to be annually set off against the mokarari rent, and the remainder Rs. 178 was remitted for the kitchen expenses of the lessee and for feeding the poor and occasional visitors and which concluded with the following statement, viz., "This sanad is, therefore, granted to Shah Pir Mahomed Saheb, as regards the remission of Rs. 250, being the amount of mokarari rent of mouzah Kaler, and according to the sanad, the Shah Saheb as well as his heirs shall get acquittances year after year from my cutchery." Held, that there was no maintenance grant in perpetuity to the lessee or donee and his descendants from generation to generation, nor was there even a maintenance grant to the donee and his heirs, but that there was a maintenance allowance granted to the donee and his heirs then living. (9 I.A. 33=8 C. 664, 14 I.A. 7=14 C. 296, 18 I.A. 22=15 B. 222, 28 I.A. 1=23 A. 194, 28 I.A. 152=28 C. 720, D.) Per Stephen, J.—Where in a previous litigation the question was whether the heirs of the grantee were entitled to claim the remission of rent and the same question, that is, as to a permanent remission of rent, is raised in a subsequent litigation by the transferees from the representatives of the original grantee, the decision in the former litigation does not amount to res judicata. A claim for batta being a claim in excess of rent is not enforceable at law. Per Mookerjee, J.—The Revenue Courts are Courts of limited jurisdiction, and notwithstanding the decision of the Collectorate Court a suit may be brought in the ordinary Civil Court, to establish the character of the land in suit, that is whether it is rent-free or rent-paying; in other words, the Revenue Court and the Civil Court are not Courts of concurrent or equal jurisdiction for the purposes of a suit to declare finally, whether the land is rent-free or liable to pay rent. A decision of the Revenue Court may be evidence, but it is by no means conclusive upon the issue whether the land is rent-free or rent-paying. (15 B.L.R. 238=24 W.R. 154, 7 B.L.R. 673=15 W.R. P.C. 30, 11 B.L.R. 434 =19 W.R. 322, 26 A. 468, 25 W.R. 189, R.) A maintenance grant is prima facie for the life of the grantee. (22 W.R. 225, 28 I.A. 1=23 A. 194, R.) But the presumption may be rebutted, either by the express provisions of the grant, or where the terms of the original grant are unknown, by long course of conduct of the parties concerned. (4 C.L.J. 399, R.) When the relation of landlord and tenant exists between two persons in respect of any property, the mere non-payment of rent, though for many years, is not sufficient to show that the relationship of landlord and tenant has ceased. (7 W.R. 400, 24 W.R. 386, 4 C. 314, 7 B. 40, 6 C.L.J. 72, B.L.R. (8)—Construction of Sanad—Ownership in soil.— Although Sanadi grants in inam, saranjam, etc., are generally speaking, more properly described as alienations of the royal share in the produce of the land, i.e., of land revenue, than grants of land, yet it is not invariably correct in all cases. (4 B. H. C. 7 A.C.J., D.) If words are employed in a grant, which expressly, or by necessary implication, indicate that Government intends that, so far as it may have any ownership in the soil, that ownership shall pass to the grantee, neither Government, nor any person subsequently to the date of the grant deriving under Government, can be permitted to say that the ownership did not so pass, unless there are in the grant such detailed provisions as may show that such words are limited in their operation. Accordingly, a sanad by the State purporting to grant a village in inam, "including the waters, the trees, the quarries, the mines and the hidden treasures, but excluding Hakdars and Inamdars," could mean only a grant by the State of such proprietary right as it had in the soil of the village to the grantee; and the State cannot say that such words as above mean nothing but land revenue. (6 B.H.C. 191 A.C.J. and 11 M.I.A. 295=10 W.R. P.C. 13, D.) Also, the saving of the rights of Hakdars and Inamdars, does not prevent the property in soil, so far as it can be regarded as having been vested in Government, from passing to the grantee. (9)—Construction of grants—English rule—Right to Soil — Timber — Forest rights — Prescription — Servitude. — In construing a grant, the rule of English Law that "a grant, from the Crown is construed most strictly against the grantee and most beneficially for the Crown, so that nothing will pass to the grantee but by clear and express words," is the proper rule to be applied. Where the sanad ran as follows:—"the village of Manavali has been conferred on you as inam, to be enjoyed by you, your son, grandson, from generation to generation. The Government dues of the village, viz., koolbab koolkanoo (i.e., all taxes and assessments), present takes, and future takes, together with the house-tax, but exclusive of haks due to hakdars, shall continue to be debited from year to year, next succeeding. the said village hereditarily without disturbanco." Held, that on the strict construction of this document and other documents in the case, the grantee did not obtain anything more than a right to Government revenue and had no right of property in the forest, and the grantee having such a right could not claim to have got a prescriptive right to dispose of all trees growing on such land. [F., 10 B.H.C.R. 471, 1 B. 523; R., 3 B. 340, 3 B. 452, 6 B. 598, 12 M. 98, 5 Bom. L.R. 983, 29 B. 480 =7 Bom. A claim to a prescriptive right to dispose of all the timber growing on another's land is absolutely inadmissible. Such a right could only be created by express grant. VAMAN JANARDHAN JOSHI v. Sanction to prosecute.

(1)—Sanction to prosecute—Principles which should guide a Court in sanctioning prosecution —Crim. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 195—Penal Code, ss. 193, 463.—The object of the law in allowing sanction to prosecute is to restrain the exercise of private spite and to insist on there being prosecutions only when the interests of public justice render it necessary. It is not intended by the law to allow any person as of right to attack his civil adversary in a Criminal Court. Another reason for not granting sanction to prosecute in every case is that there may not be a number of prosecutions without convictions. It would be disastrous if there were a number of prosecutions ending not in conviction, but in acquittals. The result would be that, instead of putting down perjury, it would rather tend to encourage it. If the Court of first instance finds an instrument to be genuine and the Judge in appeal happens to take a different view of the matter, it is not desirable to grant sanction to prosecute. RAM PROSAD ROY v. SOOBA ROY, 1 C.W.N. 400.

(2)—Perjury — False charge, making of—Sanction to prosecute refused by trying Magistrate—Duty of superior Court.—Sanction to prosecute should only be given in a case in which, in the interests of justice, further criminal proceedings are necessary. The view of the Court, which originally passed the order, on which the proceedings for sanction are taken is most valuable and should not be lightly set aside. HIRA v. GOPI, 17 P.L.R. 1907.

(3)—Sanction to prosecute — Appeal pending against proceedings giving rise to application — Sanction if could be granted.—Sanction should not be granted during the pendency of a regular appeal to the High Court from the decree and the proceedings out of which the application for sanction arises. Sanction should not be granted on a discrepancy between the statement made before the Court on oath and that recorded in the course of mutation proceedings without oath and to which the attention of the defendant was not drawn in the course of his examination. MAHANT KIRPALBAN v. MUSST. RAMDAI, 7 A.L.J. 647=7 Ind. Cas. 260.

(4)—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to party to suit pending appeal to higher Court—Conviction doubtful — Stay of proceeding for sanction pending appeal—Proper procedure.—In a suit for pre-emption, a sale-deed was produced on behalf of the defendants to show that part of the consideration consisted of certain promissory notes executed by the vendor. The promissory notes were found by the Subordinate Judge to be forgeries put forward with the object of increasing the pre-emption price, and the plaintiff's suit was decreed ; and on the application of the plaintiff, the Subordinate Judge granted sanction to prosecute the defendants and certain witnesses examined on their behalf. On appeal, the District Judge declined to revoke the sanction, although he was of opinion that the evidence, on which the Subordinate Judge relied as likely to secure a conviction, was unsatisfactory. On an application for stay of proceedings for sanction, pending an appeal preferred by the defendants in the High Court, against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, held that it was neither necessary nor desirable in this case, to grant sanction to one of the parties to pursue a doubtful criminal prosecution, pending the decision of the appeal which had been ordered to be expedited, and the hearing of which was probably being delayed by these proceedings. The proper procedure in a case of this kind is to await the conclusion of the litigation, and then to move the higher Court to take action, if necessary, in the ends of public justice. The Amin reported that he could not effect delivery, as the defendant had already taken the properties from the bailees with whom they were deposited. The District Judge sanctioned the prosecution of the defendant under ss. 183 and 186, Penal Code. Held, that the order directing the properties to be entrusted to the petitioner was not authorised by any of the provisions of the Civ. (9)—Sanction to prosecute for forgery of document filed in Court, when refused.—Sanction to prosecute a person for forgery was refused on the ground that the genuineness of the document alleged to be forged might be questioned and determined in a Civil Court in another suit and also on the ground that sanction if granted, would be calculated to prejudice the judicial enquiry and decision in that suit. Where, in a Civil suit settled, without any evidence being gone into, by confession of judgment, the Court had grounds for supposing that an offence referred to in s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code, namely, an offence of false personation under s. 205 of the Penal Code, had been committed before it, held, that the Court, before granting a sanction to prosecute, would be competent to make a preliminary enquiry and travel outside the record, and thus satisfy itself whether a prima facie case had been made out for granting a sanction. (11)—Sanction—Technical ground—Court's duty.—When a Court is invited to sanction a prosecution, because an offence against public justice has been committed, the ends of justice should not be allowed to be defeated on technical grounds. At the same time, a sanction should not be lightly granted, merely because there is room for suspicion that an offence may have been committed; the Court is bound to satisfy itself that there is at least a prima facie case, and that, if sanction is granted, there is a reasonable prospect of a successful termination of the prosecution about to be instituted. Crim. Pro. Code, there must be some enquiry and the Court must be satisfied on evidence that there is at least a prima facie case for prosecution. If the suit had been properly tried and the pro-note found to be forged, there would be no need for a fresh enquiry. But when it was not so tried, sanction should not be granted without its being found, on proper enquiry held for the purpose, that there are sufficient grounds for holding it to be a forgery (35 C. 820, R.) Per Spencer (contra):—"Produced" in s. 195, clause 6 of the Crim. (13)—*Crim. Pro. Pro. Code, the Judge should be satisfied that there is a reasonable prima facie case fit to be tried. The giving of a sanction to prosecute does not involve any trial of the issue, nor necessarily forming of any definite opinion one way or the other upon the prisoner's guilt, but is restricted to removing a bar to this question being formally tried in another place. As a general rule, no cross-examination should be allowed on affidavits in support of an application for sanction to prosecute. SAFURABAI v. ABDULLABHAI READYMONEY, 11 Bom. L.R. 1164.

Sanction to institute criminal proceeding should be in express terms and should strictly comply with the provisions of the law. It is not a sufficient compliance with the law, if the necessary elements have to be gathered from the Court's judgment by implication. No sanction should be granted unless the Court has made up its mind that the accused has committed the offences for which he is to be prosecuted. That question ought not to be left over for consideration at the trial. HABIBUR RAHMAN v. MUNSHI KHODABUX, 11 C.W.N. 195=5 C.L.J. 219=5 Cr. L.J. 29.

PUTTIAH v. VEERASAWMY, 17 M.L.J. 420.

(30)—Crim.Pro.Code (Act V of 1898), ss 195, 195 (6), 439—Sanction to prosecute—Procedure—Court if bound to take evidence—Revision of order of Civil Court refusing sanction — Civ. Pro. Code Act V of (1908), s. 115, High Court, Original Side — Revisionl jurisdiction over Presidency Small Cause Court—Practice—High Court Rules, Appellate Side, Rule 1V(a).—There has been a well established practice of the High Court that application for revision of orders by the Calcutta Small Cause Court are heard by a single Judge on the Original Side of the High Court. (29 C. 498, 30 C. 588, 7 C.W.N. 547, 30 C. 986, 7 C.W.N. 843, Disc.) Rule IV (a) of the Appellate Side Rules confirms the practice, and under it jurisdiction for revision of orders by the Small Cause Court is vested in a single Judge on the Original Side. A Civil Court, in making an order under s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code, does not exercise criminal jurisdiction. The Criminal Revisional Bench of the High Court has therefore no jurisdiction to interfere with such an order. (28 A. 554, 26 A. 249, 1 C.W.N. 400, 7 C.W.N. 112, 8 C.W.N. 73, 26 M. 98, R.) But the High Court can interfere with such order under s. 115 of the Civ Pro. Code. The jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere under s. 115, Civ. Pro. Code, is not ousted by s. 195, sub-s. (6) of the Crim. Pro. Code, inasmuch as an application under the latter is not an appeal but a substantive application. (26 A. 244, R.) In disposing of the application for sanction to prosecute for bringing a false suit under s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code, the Court has to decide whether the original suit was false, and whether, if it was false, sanction should be granted, and must make a full enquiry into the matter even if it involves trying the case de novo. So where there was no evidence in the records of the original case to prove that it was false, and Small Cause Court refused sanction on the ground that it was not bound to go beyond the record, the Court ordered the case to be sent back and tried according to law. from by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in 30 M. 383. There is nothing in the statute law to limit the grant of sanction to a party to the proceeding in connection with which the offence aimed at was committed. Sanction to prosecute for an offence against public justice may best be granted to a public officer, for there can be no better recipient of such sanction. The position would be different if the order under s. 476 was set aside on the merits. An application presented under s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code to a Civil Court, for sanction to prosecute a person, by a person who is an infant, ought to be presented on his behalf by a properly appointed next friend. The Court will not entertain an application which is not so presented. The objection goes to the root of the matter, and may be taken successfully in the appellate or the Revisional Court. (a) of Act XII of 1881, before an Assistant Collector, an application for sanction to prosecute for perjury was made and referred to the Collector who granted sanction. From the order of the Collector, the witness applied to the Sessions Judge to revoke the sanction. The Sessions Judge declined to interfere, being of opinion that the Collector was not subordinate to his Court in this matter within the meaning of s. 195, Crim. Pro. Code. An application to the Commissioner of the Division was similarly rejected. Held that the words in s. 195, Crim. Pro. Code, "the Court to which appeals from the former ordinarily lie" refer to the normal course of appeal applicable to civil cases, and as a very substantial part of the Collector's judicial work under the Rent Act is appealable only to the District Judge, the latter had power to interfere and revoke the sanction. Code, ss.* 622, 647, 568 and 569.—An appeal lies against the decision of a single Judge of the High Court, whenever it amounts to a judgment; and an order of a single Judge interfering in revision is an appellate judgment. (22 M. 68, R.) The rejection by such a Judge of a revision-petition, on the ground that the objection therein taken to the jurisdiction of the lower Appellate Court to pass a certain order was unfounded, is also a judgment and is appealable. (23 M. 169, 27 M. 340, Not F.) When an application for sanction to prosecute comes before the District Judge on appeal from the District Munsif under s. 195, Crim. Pro. Code, the District Judge has no jurisdiction to direct the Munsif to take fresh evidence. The powers conferred by s. 195, Crim. Pro. Code, are of a very special nature and no inherent jurisdiction can be attributed to any Court, in the exercise of such powers, unless it is incident to their proper exercise and the jurisdiction to direct a District Munsif to take fresh evidence is not necessarily incident to the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction conferred by s. 195, Crim. Pro. Code. The effect of s. 647, Civ. Pro. Code, is not to make the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code applicable to proceedings under s. 195, Crim. Pro. Code, which are of a criminal, rather than a civil nature. RAMA IYER v. VENKATACHALA PADAYACHI, 2 M.L.T. 84=17 M.L.J. 123=5 Cr. L.J. 288=30 M. 311. (26 M. 139, 28 A. 554, R.)

under s. 195 (7) (c), Code of Criminal Procedure, deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it is situate. The District Judge is, therefore, under s. 195 (1) (b), competent to grant sanction. Before sanction is granted, there must be a formal application by some person for sanction. Hence, where a District Judge moved by the Joint Magistrate to that effect granted sanction for the prosecution of certain persons in respect of the offence of false personation in the Court of a Village Munsif, but he did not name the person to whom he granted it, held, that the sanction ought to be revoked as there was no formal application for sanction, although the District Judge was competent to grant it. In course of execution proceedings, the respondent made certain statements which, according to the appellant, were false. The appellant applied for sanction to prosecute him under s. 195, cl. 7, Crim. Pro. Code. The sanction was refused by the Assistant Collector. The District Judge refused to entertain an appeal against the order on the ground that he had no jurisdiction. Held, that the object of sub-s. 7 of s. 195 is to indicate the Court to which a Court giving or refusing sanction to a prosecution should be deemed to be subordinate. The word "case" in cl. (b) means the actual proceedings in which the offence is said to have been committed, and not the original case out of which these proceedings arose. The opening words of cl. (c) refer to particular cases in which no appeal lies, and not to Courts against none of whose decisions an appeal lies. The nature of the proceedings in which sanction is given or refused is to determine the principal Court of original jurisdiction and there is no justification for reading these words as if they were principal Court of original civil jurisdiction. The appeal, therefore, did not lie to the District Court, as the 'case,' here meant the execution proceedings and not the original suit. AJUDHIA PERSHAD v. RAM LAL, 9 A.L.J. 124=13 Ind. The plaintiff some six months afterwards applied to the High Court for revision of the Munsif's order granting sanction for prosecution, contending inter alia that the sanction was bad, being too general in its terms and failing to specify the offence in respect of which prosecution was sanctioned. Held by the High Court, rejecting the petition, that if the petitioner wished to prefer objections against the order of the Munsif sanctioning his prosecution, he should, with reference to s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code, have taken his objections before the District Judge ; and also that the Munsif in passing the order objected to had sufficiently complied with the provisions of the law, and that there was no sufficient reason for the interference of the High Court. In re the petition of CHAJMAL DAS, A.W.N. 1884, 57.

Pro. Code, a petition, by way of appeal, lies to the High Court in every case in which a Civil or Criminal Court subordinate to it, within the meaning of sub-s. (a), gives or refuses a sanction, whether in respect of an offence committed before it or in respect of one committed before a Court subordinate of it, and in the latter case, whether it gives to sanction refused by the subordinate Court or revokes a sanction accorded by such Court. Under cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. 1, the sanction may be accorded in the first instance by the Court to which the Court in which the offence was committed is subordinate, even though no application for sanction has been made to the latter Court. For the purposes of cls. (b) and (c), of sub-s. 1, a sanction accorded by the High Court would operate as a sanction accorded by Court subordinate to it, such as the District Court. An order passed by the Court of Appeal is, in law, the order which ought to have been passed by the subordinate Court, and will, therefore, have the same efficacy and operation as the order which ought to have been passed by the latter. S. 439 expressly provides, among other things, that the High Court, as a Court of Revision, may exercise the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by s. 195. In a case in which both the original Criminal Court and the Appeal Criminal Court refuse a sanction, the High Court, as a Court of Revision, may call for the record, and, if the refusal proceeds on an error of law, it may accord the sanction which ought to have been granted by the Appellate Court, and such sanction will be operative, for the purposes of cls. (b) and (c) of sub-s. 1 of s. 195. [Appr., 17 M.L.J. 266=2 M.L.T. 239=6 Cr. L.J. 102=30 M. 382.] The plaintiff in a suit applied for an attachment before judgment and declared in the affidavit that the defendants, with a bad intention, were attempting to alienate the immoveable properties belonging to them. While he was examined viva voce in support of his petition, he stated that he only knew from hearsay that the defendants were intending to alienate the properties. The application being dismissed, the Subordinate Judge granted sanction only for an offence under s. 199, Penal Code, but refused sanction for the offences under ss. 193, 196, 200, Penal Code. The sanction was not based upon any statement made by the petitioner in his oral evidence, but upon the above-mentioned declaration made by him in his affidavit. On appeal by the defendant, the District Judge granted sanction under ss. 193, 196, 200, Penal Code. Held, that the District Judge, did not exercise a sound discretion in according sanction for the prosecution of the petitioner. Although, in his affidavit, he did not state that he based his statement upon hearsay, yet, the declaration in the affidavit was not inconsistent with his having based it upon hearsay. Quære :—Whether a village Magistrate in the Madras Presidency is or is not a Magistrate, within the meaning of s. 197 (a), Civ. Attornment to successive Saranjamdars—Estoppel—Claim to hold as Mirasi tenant—Limited interest—Adverse possession.—In an ejectment suit brought by an Inamdar, against persons claiming to hold as Mirasi or permanent tenants, it was conceded that the Inam rights in the land in suit appertained to a Saranjam held on political tenure, and that the present incumbent of the Saranjam was the plaintiff. The defendants, resisted the plaintiff's claim to eject them, on the ground that the Inam rights were merely the rights to receive the royal share of the revenue, and that the proprietary rights in the soil were, prior to the date of the grant, vested in the grantee of the Inam, and had descended to his heirs independently of the Inam, and furnished the permanent leasehold or Mirasi right. Held, that the defendants' contention involved the denial of the title to the reversionary rights, in the lands in the defendant's occupation, of the successive Saranjamdars approved by Government. The defendants had, however, been continuously paying rent for their holding to the successive Saranjamdars including the plaintiff. They were thus estopped by attornment from disputing the plaintiff's title. The rights of the successive holders of hereditary and impartible estates not governed by ordinary rules of inheritance, but subject to the condition that Government shall approve of the heir, may be barred by adverse possession. (12 I.A. 197, R.) Where, in an ejectment suit by Inamdar, it was shown that the defendants, for more than twelve years before the suit, openly asserted their claim to hold as permanent Mirasi tenants. Held, that the defendants had acquired a title to the limited interest claimed by them, and could not be objected. The grant may be on such terms as to render the estate hereditary and alienable, and even where the term jaghir is used if the grant is to the grantee and his heirs and there is nothing to control the meaning of those words, the grantee would take an absolute estate. (1)—Suit against Secretary of State for India in Council—Plaint not disclosing cause of action against defendant—Dismissal of suit.—In a suit against the Secretary of State for India, the allegations in the plaint were, that in order to realize a fine imposed upon a third person, certain goods belonging to the plaintiff were wrongfully seized by the police, and that, while these articles were in the custody of the Court, the Magistrate rejected an application by the plaintiff for their release. After stating these facts, the plaintiff claimed these articles, or if they had been sold, Rs. 10 as their value, from the Secretary of State. Held that the plaint disclosed no cause of action against the Secretary of State, who was not alleged ever to have been in possession of them or to have any connection with them in any way whatever. (1)—S. 380 (2), Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, scope and object of—Act IV of 1888, s. 5—Interpretation of Statutes—"May" and "shall."—The object of s. 380, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, is to provide for the protection of defendants in certain cases where, in the event of success, they may have a difficulty in realising their costs. The latter clause of s. 380 was introduced by the Debtors Act (VI of 1888) which prohibits the arrest or imprisonment of a woman in execution of a decree for money, and it is to be observed that it is only in suits for money that the power given under this clause of the section can be exercised. The power given to the Court under this section is discretionary and one which the Court ought or ought not to exercise according to the circumstances of each case; and unless it is shown that the exercise of the power is necessary for the reasonable protection of the defendant, the Court ought not to interfere. (17 C. 610, Appr.) It would be unduly straining the language of the section to hold that a plaintiff, being entitled under a will to a beneficial interest in a part of the surplus income derived from immoveable property, becomes thereby possessed of "sufficient immoveable property" within the meaning of the section. In the goods of PREMCHAND MOONSHEE, 21 C. 882. [Appr., 32 B. 602=10 Bom. (9)—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 342, 345, 346—Costs of appeal—Security when can be demanded—Pauper appellant—Security.—By the expression "before the appellant is called upon to appear and answer," in s. 342 of Act VIII of 1859, comparing the same with the use of similar words in the subsequent sections, especially ss. 345 and 346, is meant not the date mentioned in the notice, but the date on which the appeal is called on to be heard, and the Court has a discretion, at any time before the hearing of the appeal, to make an order demanding security for costs. [R., 3 M. 66.] Where the appellant, by his own statement, is a pauper and utterly unable to meet the costs which the respondent will have to incur, and it appears that other persons, who are presumably able to furnish, the necessary security, are interested in the matter, it is only reasonable to give the respondent some security for his costs in the appeal. appellant must deposit, with the memorandum of appeal, Rs. 500 as security for costs of the respondent. This is the general rule applicable to all cases, irrespective of any consideration as to the probable costs of the appeal. A very strong case should be made out before the Court is asked to depart from this ordinary rule. Where an appellant residing within the Court's jurisdiction has been ordered to pay the costs of the original hearing and has not obeyed the order, he cannot be required to furnish security for such costs before the hearing of the appeal, unless his conduct in not paying the costs as per order of the Court is proved to be vexatious —that is, such as indicates a wilful determination on his part not to obey the order of the Court. The fact that the appellant did not pay the costs owing to his inability to do so, would not make his conduct vexatious. AHMED bin SHAIK ESSA KALIFFA v. On an application by the plaintiff that the case be struck off for default of deposit, and that the defendant pay costs already incurred at the time of the application, it was ordered that the defendant should deposit a sum to cover costs of the future appeal, and that in default, the case should be struck off, although the summons to show cause was not in point of form to that effect ELIAS v. within six weeks of the date on which his plaint or appeal is filed ; and that unless such security be so furnished, the suit of such person, if plaintiff, should not be proceeded with, or appeal admitted, unless he had furnished the necessary security to cover costs in the appeal. Appeal to the Sudder Court from a decree of the Zillah Court by a party then temporarily absent in England, but having real estates and factories within the jurisdiction of the Court. No security was furnished by the appellant's Vakeel within six weeks after lodging the appeal. The respondent, in the first instance, put in an answer to the reasons of appeal filed by the appellant, but afterwards filed a petition for dismissal for non-compliance with the requirement of Beng. Reg. XIV, 1829, s. 2, cl. 1, contending that the appellant was a resident in a foreign territory, and had not furnished security within six weeks as required by that Regulation. The Sudder Court held, that such security ought to have been furnished by the appellant, who, residing in England, pendente lite, was to be considered as resident in a foreign territory within the meaning of the Regulation, and dismissed the appeal. Such judgment reversed on appeal by the Judicial Committee, and the suit remitted to India for trial, on the ground that the Sudder Court had not, by Reg. XIV of 1829, any power ex mero motu to dismiss the appeal, as the appellant was guilty of (1) no default under that Regulation, not having been called upon by the respondent or the Court to furnish security for costs ; (2) or of laches, in not voluntarily offering security ; the Regulation providing only that a suit, or appeal, should not be proceeded with until security was furnished. Thus, where the plaintiff deposited in Court a sum of money, under s. 34 of the Civ. Pro. Code, Act VIII of 1859, as security for costs, the defendant is not entitled, as of right, to an order detaining the money in Court, pending an appeal preferred by him against the judgment which had been passed in favour of the plaintiff. Separation Deed.

(1)—Husband and wife — Agreement for future separation—Void agreement—Estoppel. —The principle upon which the law looks askance at agreements contemplating the future separation of husband and wife is a principle which, if not quod semper, quod ubique, quod ab omnibus is at least a thoroughly fixed and intelligible principle having its foundations in the welfare of society and the permanence of the marriage tie. It is, therefore, a principle which a Judge may enforce with less diffidence than if he were dealing with a doctrine of public policy of an uncertain or fluctuating nature.—An agreement, between husband and wife, providing for an immediate re-union, coupled with a provision for subsequent separation is bad under English law, as also under Mahomedan law. MEHER ALLY v. SAKERKHANOOBAI, 7 Bom. L.R. 602. [R., 8 Ind. Cas. 412=8 M.L.T. 314=34 M. 398.]

(2)—Mahomedan law — Restitution of conjugal rights. — According to the Mahomedan Law, it is not competent to parties contracting a marriage to enter into a separation deed, by which the husband consented that his wife might live with her parents; and in a suit for restitution for conjugal rights by the husband against his wife, who also pleaded non-payment of her prompt dower in bar of the suit, he would be entitled to a decree for restitution conditional on payment of the dower. Sequestration.

(1)—Contempt of decree or order of Court—Process of sequestration—Practice.—The power is resident in the High Court of issuing writs of sequestration for seizing the property of persons guilty of contempt of Court. The object of requiring a memorandum, as required by Rule 389 of the Supreme Court Rules, to be endorsed upon the copy of the order served upon the party guilty of contempt, is to enable the party complaining of non-compliance with the order to make an ex parte application to the Court for a writ of sequestration and to give the person upon whom the order is served notice that he will be liable to have his estates sequestered forthwith upon his disobedience of or non-compliance with the order. In the absence of such memorandum, the party should give proper notice to the opponent of his intention to apply for the writ. HARIVALLABHDAS KALLIANDAS v. UTAMCHAND MANIKCHAND, 8 B.H.C. (2)—Letters Patent, s. 12—Charter, Supreme Court of Bombay, s. 41—24 & 25 Vict., ch. 104, s. 9—Constructive residence—Writ of sequestration—Jurisdiction of High Court.—A permanent resident of Baroda who carried on the business of a banker at Bombay by means of a munim and had a place of business there, was held to be constructively an inhabitant of Bombay and subject to the orders and processes of the High Court, in its equity jurisdiction as was provided by s. 1 of the Charter of the Supreme Court of Bombay and by s. 9 of Act XXIV and XXV Vict., Ch. 104. The High Court will assert its jurisdiction to prevent the writ of sequestration from becoming a mere form, in such manner as the circumstances of the case may justify and render most expedient; and acting upon the analogy by which the Court of Equity grants injunctions to obtain indirectly a control over property which is beyond the jurisdiction, the Court would, under proper circumstances, operate in personam with a view to prevent its own writ of sequestration from being frustrated. (3)—Sequestrator in possession—Rights of.—A sequestrator in possession is not to be disturbed by a claimant, without leave of the Court. The usual mode is to apply for permission to bring an action of ejectment, or to examine por interesse suo. Under a writ of sequestration the Sheriff seized a moiety of an estate in the possession of A; A presented a petition to the Court, entitled in a cause then pending, claiming the land under a deed of sale executed by the defendant, pendente lite, praying to be put in possession, and to be allowed to go before the master and examine witnesses, pro interesse suo. Proceedings were taken under this petition before the master, but afterwards it was agreed by consent that the matter of the petition should be tried by the Court, and the witnesses examined viva voce by the Court at the hearing of the cause in which the petition was entitled. Held, that there was nothing irregular in such a mode of proceeding. In the case of lands held by a private servant in lieu of wages, it is assumed that they are resumable. (7 M.I.A. 128, R.) In this Presidency there is a series of decisions that, in cases where a service grant was included in the mal assets of a zemindari at the time of the permanent settlement, there is a presumption that the zemindar can resume. Service Inam.

See INAM.

(1)—Mokhassa tenure—Right of mokhassadar to hold land irrespective of performance of services—Right of zemindar to dispense with services and resume land—Burden of proof in suit for ejectment.—The "mokhassa" is a well-known tenure in the Northern Circars and consists of the assignment of a village or land to an individual either rent-free or at a low quit-rent on condition of service. If the lands given to the mokhassadars had been granted to them simply as payment for their services in lieu of money, then the employment may be discontinued and the remuneration for the same put an end to. But if the lands had been granted outright subject only to certain services to be performed, the mokhassadars cannot be ejected until they refuse performance of the services. The former is the grant of an office the performances of whose duties is remunerated by the use of certain lands, and the latter is the grant of an estate burdened with a certain service. Where lands, belonging to a zemindar, were granted by him on condition of the grantee rendering services and of paying a certain sum of money to the zemindar in recognition of his ownership thereof, prima facie, the ownership remained with the zemindar and the burden of proving that the zemindar had no right to eject the grantee would lie on the latter. (14 M. 365, R.) Suit to recover lands granted on mokhassa tenure on the ground that plaintiff did not require services from the persons in possession thereof. No office by any particular designation had been conferred upon the original grantee, but an obligation of a feudal character had been imposed on him. He was to provide a certain number of men as custodians of the zemindar's property. When the men were actually on duty they were paid batta. The services were rendered intermittently and not continuously. However, the mokhassadars paid a uniform rent for more than 120 years without any alteration at any time, and the lands had descended from father to son hereditarily during that period. There had been no instance of resumption, or even an attempt at resumption during all this time. There had been no attempt to enhance or alter the rent or to interfere with the devolution of the property from heir to heir. Further, plaintiff himself had taken leases from the mokhassadars and purchased some of their Kamatam lands, showing a consciousness that they held a permanent tenure. Held that the plaint lands had been granted in perpetuity to the mokhassadars

(2)—Service Inam—Resumption by Government, effect of—Resumption does not extinguish prior incumbrances—Reg. VI of 1831—Private Service Inam, not within its purview—Jadaba Service, nature of.—A mortgaged certain service inam lands with possession to B in 1892. A subsequently sold them to the plaintiff. In 1898 Government resumed the lands, assessed them fully and issued patta in the name of the plaintiff on the strength of his sale-deed. The plaintiff now sued to recover possession of the lands in question free of B's mortgage. He contended (1) that the mortgage was extinguished by reason of the resumption by Government; and (2) that the mortgage was invalid, the inam being inalienable under s. 2 of Reg. VI of 1831. Held:—(1) the resumption by Government did not operate to extinguish prior incumbrances. Also held:—(2) that the inam (Jadaba service), though originally granted partly for public and partly for private service, had been latterly treated as one granted for private service, and therefore did not come within the purview of s. 2 of Reg. VI of 1831. SREEVADHU YERRANNA v. KANNAMMA, 2 M.W.N. 1911, 354=21 M.L.J. 962=12 Ind. Cas. 457. (7 M.I.A. 128, 26 M. 339, 30 M. 434, R.)

The meaning of the expression is merely that there is nothing payable to Government in consideration of the inamdar's possession of the land. The effect of the enfranchisement of a service inam under Madras Act II of 1894, where the Government merely gives up the right of resumption possessed by it and does not resume the inam, is that the title rests where it was before. (1)—Defendant absent from home but his whereabouts known, affixture of summons to the outer door not a good service.—Appeal from an order refusing an application made by one of the defendants, the present appellant, to have an ex parte decree obtained against him set aside under s. 108, Civ. Pro. Code, as he was not duly served with the summons. The affidavit of the process-server was to the effect that the person to be served was not found at his house, but that his wife informed the process-server that her husband was absent at a place of a distance of 34 miles and would return in 8 or 10 days. Without any further attempt to serve the summons, personally, the process-server affixed the summons to the outer door of the house. It was urged for the appellant that the summons had not been served in a legal manner. Setting aside the order appealed against and directing that the ex-parte decree be set aside, so far as regards the appellant, held, that when a serving officer finds a defendant to be away, temporarily, from home, and knows where he is, it is not a good service if he does no more than fix the summons to the outer door of the house; he must make further efforts to effect personal service, by finding the defendant or the summons should be again sent to the defendant's house to be served upon him when the information shows that he is likely to be at home. By s. 5 of Ben. Reg. XLIV of 1798, it is provided that, when a

Zemindary is sold by public sale for discharge of arrears due from the Zemindar, or others, to Government, "all engagements which such proprietor shall have contracted with dependent Talookdars, whose Talooks may be situated in the lands sold, as also all the leases to under-farmers and pottahs to ryots for the cultivation of the whole or any part of such lands (with the exception of the engagements, pottahs and leases, specified in ss. 7 and 8), shall stand cancelled from the day of sale, and the purchaser, or the purchasers, of the land shall be at liberty to collect from such dependent Talookdar and from the ryots or cultivators of the lands let in farm, and the lands not farmed, whatever the former proprietor would have been entitled to demand according to the established usages and rates of the Pergunnah or District in which such lands may be situated, had the engagements so cancelled never existed." And the 7th section provides that s. 5 is not to authorize the assessment of any increase upon the lands of such dependent Talookdars as were exempted from increase by s. 41 of Reg. VIII of 1793, at the Decennial Settlement of 1793. In 1823, a Zemindar fell into arrears of revenue, and Government sold the Zemindary at a public sale for discharge of the arrears due, whereby the auction-purchaser acquired such rights to cancel leases, &c., as then existed; but he took no steps under Ben. Reg. XI of 1822, ss. 30, 32 and 33, which gave power to a purchaser to cancel the leases, or to enhance the rent; nor was any claim in that respect made by subsequent purchasers from him, until the year 1856, when the Zemindar then in possession brought a suit to enhance the rent. Held, reversing the Sudder and Zillah Courts' decrees:—First, that the tenure, a Mouroosee Istimrari, under which the defendant held, was hereditary, and, as it had been uninterruptedly held anterior to the Decennial Settlement at a fixed rent, the Zemindar had no power to enhance the rent. Secondly, that such a tenure was not cancelled, ipso facto, by the sale in 1823, as the language in s. 7 of Ben. Reg. XLIV of 1793 showed that what was intended by s. 5 of that Regulation was not the destruction of the tenure, but the enhancement of rent, under certain specified and equitable limitations. Quære.—Whether such power is not confined to the auction-purchaser himself, and not to those claiming under him? When false witnesses or forged documents are produced to support a case, such fact naturally creates suspicion; but if the appellate Court has to deal with a just case though foolishly and wickedly attempted to be supported by false evidence, such circumstances will not prejudice the judgment on the merits, when the case is supported by independent evidence. So ruled, when their Lordships were satisfied from the evidence that an ancient tenure existed, which was endeavoured to be supported by a forged document and evidence. RANEE SURNOMOYEE v. (12)—Service land—Partition between joint proprietors—Services rendered—Right of shareholder to withdraw his land from burden of service.—The plaintiff and others were joint proprietors of a certain talook, and under that state of things, a portion of land within the talook was assigned to the defendant by all the proprietors of the talook jointly in consideration of his services throughout the area of the talook as pasban, i e., services of a Chowkeedaree character. Subsequently, a butwarra of the talook was effected and the plaintiff, as a result of the butwarra, obtained a certain one-fourth of a share of it, but the whole of the land which the defendant held as consideration for his services fell within the share thus allotted to the plaintiff. The plaintiff now sued to resume or to take back from the defendant three-fourths of his service land upon the ground that, although the defendant was performing exactly the same service which originally constituted the consideration for this land, still he (plaintiff), being a one-fourth shareholder only of the talook, ought not to pay more than a one-fourth share of the consideration for those services, while the effect of the whole service land falling within his putta was that he was made to bear the whole of the burden. Held, that, as long as the defendant's services were required and rendered, the plaintiff could not withdraw from the defendant that land which was given to him by all the shareholders together, when they were joint, as consideration for those services. (14)—Suit for patilki watan—Adverse possession—Burden of proof—Discovery of new evidence—Review—Civ.Pro. Code, 1859, s. 376. —In a suit for a declaration of title to the whole of a patilki watan, plaintiffs produced a decree of the Peshwa's Government dated 1722 in which they were declared to be the sole owners of the watan. The defendants, on the other hand, produced a decree dated 1742 declaring them entitled to a moiety of the watan, and a document dated 1743 in which orders were given that the terms of the decree were to be adhered to; but they were unable to prove that their ancestors had had any concern with the watan for a period of 96 years subsequent thereto. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, showed that, during the whole of this period, their ancestors were recognised as sole owners. Held that, under the circumstances, the burden of proving uninterrupted possession for more than 30 years prior to the institution of the suit lay on the defendants. [R., 18 P. L.R. 1900.] The High Court refused to grant an application for review of judgment on the discovery of new evidence, as the applicant failed to show that the document brought forward was admissible in evidence, and that it was not within his knowledge or could not have been adduced by him at the time when the judgment was passed. (18)—Holder of vatan, competency of, to create perpetual mutalik— Vatandar, whether could exclude his successors from entire management.— In this suit brought by the plaintiff in 1884 to recover possession from the defendants of certain vatan property with profits, the defendants answered that the plaintiff's great grand-father executed, in 1825, a karar-patra and sanad to the ancestor of the defendants, by which they acquired the hereditary right to keep the whole vatan in their possession and management and to take one-third share of the income derived from the same. The lower Court found the defendants' documents not proved, and that the rights set up by them, if any, had ceased on the resumption and subsequent new grant by Government to plaintiff's father in 1864, and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed to the High Court which held that the kararnamah and sanad were proved and that the Regulation of 1827 forbidding alienations of service vatan could not have retrospective effect. The creation of a perpetual mutalik with a certain share of the vatan as vritti, is within the powers of the holder of a vatan for the time being, especially when created in return for good and valuable consideration passing to the vatan. The performance of service as mutalik was not the entire consideration or motive for the grant under the kararnamah in this case, nor did the document expressly provide for the grant ceasing with the cessation of the services incidental to the vatan. As for the sanad, the grantor was held to be incompetent to have excluded his successors in the vatan from its entire management, to vest it in the permanent mutalik and whilst leaving his successors as absolute owners of the two-thirds, to deprive them of all control over its management. This was virtually attaching an incident to their estate which was inconsistent with its nature, and this he was not competent to do. BHIMAJI BALVANT v. were regarded as the remuneration of the hereditary officer andmade inalienable by Reg. XVI of 1827 (as construed by the Court) beyond the life of the actual incumbent. It was not the intention of either party to the Gordon Settlements to convert the vatan lands into private property of the vantandars with the necessary incident of alienability, but to leave them attached to hereditary offices which, although freed from the performance of service, remained in tact, as shown by the definition of "hereditary officer" in the declaratory Act (VIII of 1874). An alienation by way of mortgage of any portion of vatan property has no force beyond the life of the Vatandar mortgagor. [Reversed, 24 B. 556, P.C.] This was a suit to have it declared that a mortgage executed by one K (plaintiff's step-mother) to the defendant's predecessor-in-title was null and void and for possession of the mortgaged villages, or, in the alternative, for redemption of the mortgage, under the following circumstances. In 1847, plaintiff's father died leaving him surviving his two widows K and R. In 1848, plaintiff was born to R. The sevice vatan lands of the plaintiff's father had been attached by the Government, because he refused to produce the sannad under which he claimed those lands, but a portion thereof was subsequently restored by Government, the same having been entered in the name of K (without Government recognizing the plaintiff as the legitimate son of the owner of the vatan lands). The remaining portion of the vatan lands was subsequently restored by the Government to K, who was acknowledged as the holder thereof, the agreement with her being under the "Gordon Settlement." Thereupon, K mortgaged two vatan villages for Rs. 9,900 to S, the defendants' predecessor-in-title, to whom possession was given and revenues paid by the village officers as per directions of the mortgagor. The mortgagor repented of the transaction subsequently and ordered the village officers not to pay the revenues to S, who brought a suit, obtained a decree and in execution got possession of the property. The plaintiff having quarrelled with K, the latter adopted one B.

The validity of the adoption was challenged by the plaintiff in a suit in which his legitimacy (as the heir of his father) was established. As a result of this decision in favour of the plaintiff, the Collector entered the vatan lands in the plaintiff's name. The plaintiff and S had been moving amicably as long as S was alive. After the death of S, his sons (the present defendants) fell out with the plaintiff. Hence the present suit. On the evidence adduced in the case, it was held (1) that the suit property was part of a desai vatan, and as such was held on service tenure, (2) that the mortgage by K to S was not valid beyond the life-time of the vatandar K who mortgaged it, (3) that K must be considered to be a trespasser for the reason that the plaintiff became the rightful vatandar from his birth in 1848, he having established his legitimacy (as the son of his father) the original owner of the vatan lands in a Civil Court, (4) that the fact that the Government effected the Gordon settlement, with K (a trespasser) would not have the effect of making her the vatandar so long as the plaintiff was alive, (5) that the property having become K's by adverse possession (as a trespasser) the plaintiff's right to recover the property in virtue of his vatan right had become barred, and (6) that the plaintiff (as heir of his step-mother K) was entitled to redeem the plaint mortgage which had been proved. (27)—Bombay Act, VII of 1863, s. 11, cl. 4—Lands held for service, action regarding tenure of—Jurisdiction — Civil Courts— Competency of local Legislature to curtail jurisdiction of Mofussil Courts.—It has been enacted by cl. 4 of s. 11 of Bombay Act VII of 1863 (an Act for the Summary Settlement of claims to exemption from the payment of Government Land Revenue) that "no suit or action between the Government and the holders of any lands held for service, in regard to the tenure of such lands, shall be entertained in any Court of Civil Judicature." Prima facie, the provision in the said cl. 4 is a direct bar to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Civil Courts in such cases. It was contended in this case that the clause applies only to holders of service lands, that the plaintiff denied that his land was subject to provide for service at all and that therefore the clause could not apply to him. But it was held that the phrase 'lands held for service' mean not necessarily lands so described in the plaint, but those declared to be so by Government under the powers conferred by s. 32 (d) of the Act. Art. 3 of cl. 3 says that 'service lands shall be resumable under general rules' and, on the provision thus made for some degree of regularity in the determination of claims, it was sought to be contended that the Government was in these cases protected against a civil action only when it had in fact laid down some general rules and conformed to them. It was, however, held that, since the Act has prescribed without qualification that 'no suit or action' shall be entertained as to the tenure of service lands, the jurisdiction cannot be restored by a mere direction in another clause, that Government is to follow general rules such as it "may think proper from time to time to lay down." [R., 8 B. 264, 5 L.B.R. 162, F.B.] The provisions of a statute must generally receive a plain construction liberal enough to admit of the local legislature extending or restricting the powers of the Courts, its own creatures, even though the possible occasions for the exercise of the High Court's jurisdiction may thus indirectly be increased or diminished in number. though asked to do so; but his suit was dismissed by the lower Court on the ground that as the first defendant had enjoyed the lands without rendering any service for 30 years, his possession was adverse to the plaintiff and barred the claim: Held, (remanding the case for a fresh finding), that as the lands were held for service, the fact that no service was performed would not of itself make the holding adverse. Held, also, that the render of service was on the same footing as payment of rent, and to make the possession of such lands adverse, there must be a refusal to perform service or a claim to hold the lands free of service. Held, also, that a document containing merely a statement of past facts with a promise for the future to act in accordance therewith did not require registration, and was admissible in evidence. Per Ranade, J.—The mere fact that lands are held on service tenure makes no change in the relation of landlord and tenant, s. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act expressly classes service with money or grain rents. The rulings in regard to rents apply with equal effect to service tenure lands. The plaintiff in 1851 purchased the zemindaree from an auction purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, and he sued to resume the lands in the jagir, which had been held rent-free by the defendants and those from whom they claimed for nearly a century. Held that, notwithstanding that the lands were the subject of assessment when the zemindaree was permanently settled by the Government with the zemindar in 1802, the plaintiff had no right to assess these lands. The settlement between the Government and the zemindar could not affect the rights of the jagirdars, whose rights were derived, not from the zemindar, but from the supreme authority in the State. The lands held on this tenure, even if chakeran, differed from the ordinary chakiran lands contemplated by s. 41, Regulation VIII of 1793. The jagirdars were bound, if occasion required it, to protect the pergunnah from the incursions of wild elephants, and might forfeit the tenure if they wilfully failed in the performance of that duty but were not liable to have their lands resumed, because there was no longer any occasion for the performance of the particular service. (32)—Possession of lands as chowkeedaree chakeran—Presumption of lands having been set apart at Decennial Settlement— Onus on zemindar to prove that lands were private lands —Resumption.—This was a suit for possession of land which the plaintiff alleged to belong to his mal lands, but which were in the possession of the chowkeedar of the village as his chakeran lands. The Government who represented the chowkeedar alleged that the lands had always been chowkeedaree chakeran lands and as such, could not be taken possession of by the zemindar. The contention on second appeal that, since the Government could not prove that at the time of the Decennial Settlement, the lands had been appropriated to the chowkeedar, the zemindar was at liberty to resume and take possession of them, was not accepted by the High Court which held that the onus of proof that the lands were private lands of the zemindar, not set apart at the Decennial Settlement for the maintenance of the chowkeedar, rested on the plaintiff, the zemindar. It was not for the Government to prove that they were then set apart as chowkeedaree lands. The presumption from the facts admitted in this case, more especially from the long possession of the lands as chowkeedaree chakeran by the chowkeedar, was that the lands were set apart at the Decennial Settlement for the chowkeedar. The case was not one for the resumption and assessment of invalid lakheraj; upon the facts found by the lower Court the plaintiff had not made out any case and had not shown that the defendant held under a tenure upon which private services were reserved so that the tenure was forfeited on account of the refusal of the defendant to perform such services: the High Court accordingly confirmed the decree of the lower appellate Court in favour of the defendant. (39)—Resumption of estate by Government—Political tenure—Mixed estate of saranjam and inam.—The engagements entered into by the English Government with the Raja of Satara and with the several Jaghirdars by treaty in 1819, did not impart any greater fixity of tenure than had been previously enjoyed by those Jaghirdars under the Native Rulers, and their Jaghirs remained liable to resumption at the will of the Government, although from reasons of political expediency, the English authorities would not be disposed to add to the disturbance and confusion attending a conquest by dispossessing the holders of property to any greater extent than was necessary for safety. The question to whom a saranjam or jaghir shall be granted upon the death of its holder is one which belongs exclusively to the Government, to be determined upon political considerations, and it is not within the competency of any legal tribunal to review the decision which the Government may pronounce. The inam villages and lands with the mokasa included as parts of one saranjam for the support of troops remained after 1820, a personal and military jaghir. The tenure created was political. A mixed estate of saranjam and inam was granted by the treaty of 1820 to be held on the same political tenure, and passed intact to the person whom the Government might recognize as the head of the family, so that it would not be competent for any Court of law to dispute it. (2)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 111—Set-off—Extent to which set-off may be allowed.—The provision in the Civ. Pro. Code, in regard to set-off is one regulating procedure, and not intended to take away any right of set-off, whether legal or equitable, which parties would have had independently of it; and the right of set-off will be found to exist not only in cases of mutual debts and credits, but also where the cross-demands arise out of one and the same transaction, or are so connected in their nature and circumstances, as to make it inequitable that the plaintiff should recover, and the defendant be driven to a cross-suit. (22)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 121—Set-off, when allowed—Jurisdiction—Set off—Appeal—Subject-matter of suit—Jurisdiction.—S. 121, Civ. Pro. From this proviso it follows that a Court cannot entertain the question of set off if the amount claimed by the defendant exceeds the amount cognizable by it. When a defendant pleads a set-off and claims a decree, the subject-matter of the suit is no longer the mere claim of the plaintiff, but the cross-claims of both parties. Consequently, if the claim of the defendant was for a sum in excess of Rs. 5,000 the forum of appeal would

The question as to what extent, if any, defendant was entitled to draw back, on account of the failure of the plaintiff to deliver the tea entrusted to him in good condition, might be put in issue, but after the decision of such issue it would still be open to the defendant to bring an action against plaintiff for any special damages sustained by him owing to plaintiff's negligence. There were also provisions in the lease to the effect that the Government may at the expiration of the term, farm this bridge to any other contractor, taking over the lessee's plant at a fair valuation to be determined by arbitration, and also that "if the Government should see fit to cancel the lease during its currency with a view to substitute a pontoon bridge, or for any other cause for which the lessee is not responsible, he will be entitled to full compensation from Government for all losses." A died before the expiry of the lease, and the District Magistrate, acting on behalf of Government, seized all the stock and materials and deprived A's representatives of the use of the bridge. The Magistrate then directed two gentlemen to assess the value of the stock, and adding a certain percentage to their assessment fixed the value at a certain sum. Then a suit was filed on behalf of Government against the representatives to recover the balance of money due under the lease after giving credit to the defendants for the assessed value of the stock. Held that the sum assessed in the manner described above could not be strictly considered as a set-off, that the suit was one for balance of account, and that the

In an action by a Company to recover a sum fraudulently obtained by the defendants before the liquidation of the Company, one of the defendants claimed set-off against the Company a debt from the company to him incurred prior to the commencement of the ewinding up: Held, that the defendant could set-off the debt due to him, though the amounts of the debts were ascertained after the liquidation, as the debts which were sought to be set off one against the other were debts between the same parties, and in the same interest and neither resulted from a dealing with the liquidator. It would appear by analogy to s. 209, Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, that there being only one decree, and not cross-decrees, the party entitled to the lesser sum could not be allowed to take out execution against the party entitled to the large sum, and, therefore, the Court would be certainly bound to direct a set-off or to enter satisfaction of the smaller sum upon the decree. Pro. Code, the Principal Sudder Amin stayed the execution in A's suit until the decree should be passed in the cross-suit brought against him by J. After decree was obtained against A in the cross-suit, A proceeded to attach it in execution of his decree. One R, who had purchased the rights and interests of J in his suit against A while it was pending, objected to the attachment, and the present suit was brought by A to have his right declared to attach the whole of the decree in the cross-suit in execution of his decree against J, and also to set aside the sale by J to R as a fictitious and collusive transaction intended to deprive him of his rights under his decree. The Court directed the sale of the whole of J's decree, without regard to the sale of his rights in the suit. A, the execution of whose decree the Court had stayed, should be regarded as being in the position of a creditor who has obtained an attachment by written order, and no subsequent purchase could be set up against the right of the attaching creditor. (69)—Master and servant—Suit for wages.—Plaintiff sued the defendant for Rs. 77 and odd, arrears of salary. The defendant claimed a set-off of Rs. 119 being money received by the plaintiff on his behalf in the course of service. The Court refused to allow the defendant's claim on the ground that the amount exceeded the plaintiff's claim. Held that the defendant was entitled to set off the sum claimed. It was a definite pecuniary demand, not of the nature of unliquidated damages, and in the claim the parties filled the same character as in the suit. When the amount claimed by the defendant did not exceed the pecuniary jurisdiction of the lower Court it ought to have entertained the defendant's claim. RAMZAN KHAN v. (70)—Insolvency of husband—Administration by widow—Rights of Official Assignee—Fraud on creditors—Their rights—Separate suit.—In a suit by a widow, as administratrix of the estate of her husband, against her son, to recover certain moveable property on the allegation that it had been misappropriated by the defendant, the latter pleaded that it was fraudulently kept out of his father's schedule in the insolvency proceedings. Held, that it was not competent to any third party to set up a claim, where the Official Assignee, having been made a party to the suit, disclaimed all interest in the suit property, the right of ownership being vested in the plaintiff notwithstanding the alleged fraud. The creditors, who had been defrauded, have their remedy against the Official Assignee for the disclaimer by means of a suit. MR. D.W. MANLY v. MRS. SARAH MANLY, 14 W.R. 136.

(82)—Purchase of decree—Right of judgment-debtor to set off cross decree against purchaser. —The purchaser of the rights and interests of a decree holder is entitled to execute the decree purchased in like manner and to the same extent as the original decree-holder might have done, and consequently the purchaser takes it subject to the rights of the judgment-debtor to set off any cross decree, which he might have against the original decree-holder. DOORGA CHURN NUNDEE v. DEBNATH ROY CHOWDHRY, 18 W. R. 442.

(83)—Cross-decree—Liability of purchaser of decree to set-off.—In the case of cross-decrees one of which is set-off against the other, the purchaser of one of such decrees cannot stand, as regards the judgment-debtor, in a better position than the person whose rights he has purchased ; he can take the decree only subject to all the equities and liabilities attaching to it. His right is therefore to be deemed to be subject to the set-off with the cross-decree under the provisions of s. 209 of Act VIII of 1859. NUNDO COOMAR BUKSHEE v. KOONJO KISHORE ROY, 6 W.R. (84)—Cross-decree—Sale of decree--Rights of assignee — Special appeal.—A got a decree against B for Rs. 373 who subsequently got a decree against A for Rs. 500. Thereupon B sold his decree to C. Then, A executed the decree he had got against B and put up B's decree against himself for sale in execution and bought it himself. Subsequently C executed the decree against A, and A's claim under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 having been disallowed, he brought a suit to establish his claim and to have it declared that the sale by B to C was invalid on the ground that it was a collusive transaction. Both the lower Courts found that the sale was bona fide. Held that the special appeal must fail, as that finding could not be set aside in special appeal. As to any equity which A may have under his decree, that must be determined in another suit. But when C takes out execution, A can apply under the provisions of s. 209 of Act VIII of 1859, and may be entitled to set off his decree against B and pay the balance only. SHEO NARAIN SINGH v. (85)—Cross-decrees—Fraudulent assignment, right of set-off not affected by.—There are conflicting decisions on the point, which is a doubtful one, whether, where the decree-holder has assigned his decree bona fide and for a valuable consideration, the assignee would take the decree subject to the equities and liabilities of the decree-holder to the judgment-debtor. Where however, as in the present case, the assignment itself has been found to be fraudulent, there is no conflict of decisions, and the judgment-debtor has a good cause of action for a suit to set aside the assignment as fraudulent and being without consideration. It was, under the circumstances of the present case, held that the two cross-decrees possessed by the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor remained as they were originally passed and could be set off, the one against the other in execution department. SYUD TALUB HOSSEIN v. R. WALKER, 7 W.R. 470.

(86)—Set-off—Cross decrees—Civ. Pro. Code, 1859, s. 209—Stay of execution of decree.—Where a decree for the plaintiff has been obtained in a suit, and a cross suit is pending, the Court will not stay proceedings in execution of the first suit, or order the proceeds of that decree to be paid into Court to abide the result of the second. (87)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 209—Stay of execution—Cross-decrees—Set-off.—S who had a decree for costs against M in the Court of R, got it transferred to the Court of B for execution. M who had a suit pending against S, prayed for stay of execution till the disposal of the suit. After the decision of the suit in M's favour the Court of B struck off S's execution petition, as the amount of his decree against M was less than the amount of M's decree against S. Held that the order of the Court was not in accordance with s. 209 of Act VIII of 1859, that, after the decision of the suit, it ought to have been ascertained which party had a decree for the larger sum, and that execution should have been taken out by that party only, and for so much as should remain after deducting the smaller sum, which should have been entered on the decree for the larger sum. SHIB CHUNDER SIRCAR v. JUGGUT INDUR BUNWAREE GOVIND BAHADOOR, 12 W.R. 212.

(88)—Execution—Cross-decrees—Possession—Mesne profits.—Plaintiffs obtained a decree for possession and mesne profits in respect of certain land. The defendants subsequently obtained a decree for possession and mesne profits in respect of the same land as well as other lands. Both decree-holders took out execution. Held that there was no reason why each party should not take out execution of his decree and be entitled to receive wassilat separately. ANUND MOHUN HAJRAH v. SHIBO SOONDUREE DABEE, 16 W.R. 256.

(89)—Cross-decrees—Execution of one barred by limitation—Right of set-off.—A tenant obtained a decree reversing the sale of his tenure and giving him possession with mesne profits, but directing him to pay the amount of rent due to the zemindar with interest up to date of realization. The decree was kept alive intermediately by repeated applications. The defendant zemindar made no attempt to realize the amount of rent awarded him under the decree, and the execution of his decree was barred by limitation. When the tenant again sued out execution of his decree, the zemindar applied to have the sum decreed to him deducted as a set-off against the tenant's claim. Held that the zemindar could not be allowed to execute his barred decree in the shape of a set-off. PROSUNNO COOMAR GHOSE v. SHAM LAL GUNGOPADHYA, 5 W.R. Mis. 8.

(90)—Cross-decrees — Set-off, when can be allowed—Cross-decrees whether can be kept alive by action of opposite party—Act XIV of 1859, s. 20—Order striking case off file—Enforcement of decree—Limitation.—In the case of cross-decrees, a set-off is admissible only where the respective decree-holders are seeking to execute and not where a cross-decree is not capable of execution by lapse of time. [D., 9 W.R. 590 (591).] A cross-decree must be kept alive by the action of the party entitled under it and an application by the opposite party to execute his cross-decree, cannot bring the decree of the other party into activity. The making of a note by some officer of the Court in the margin of a register to the effect that the case had been struck off the file is not a proceeding under s. 20, Act XIV of 1859, to keep alive a decree. (91)—Execution of decree—Cross-decrees—Set-off—Limitation.—The act which the law requires one man to do to save his limitation as to his decree of one date and character, cannot be considered the same act which another is required to do to save his limitation in respect to that other man's decree of a totally different date and character. HEMRAJ CHOWDHRY v. ASOODUN, 5 W.R. Mis. 43.

(92)—Cross-decrees — Two judgments and decrees in same suit—Set-off—Execution—Limitation.—In a suit for the resumption of various parcels of land, the Court gave the plaintiff a decree for a portion of her claim with proportionate costs. Subsequently, plaintiff applied to the Court for a review of its judgment, and obtained from the same Court a further decree for the rest of her claim. In appeal, the High Court reversed the further decree and gave judgment for the defendant on that part of the case with costs of the proceedings in proportion. Plaintiff allowed more than three years to elapse without making any application to execute the partial decree which she had at first got. When defendant applied to execute his decree for costs, plaintiff petitioned that, before executing the defendant's decree, so much of the costs as had been decreed to her under the former decree might be deducted and set off. Held that, although in form the decree obtained by the defendant was distinct from the decree passed in the other portion of the case, yet substantially these two judgments and decrees being in the same suit, and relating to parts of the same subject-matter, were in fact only parts of one general judgment and decree and that the two decrees must be treated as if they had been reduced to one, wherein judgment was given in part for the plaintiff and in part for the defendant, with proportionate costs to the several parties, and that it was the duty of the Court before issuing a warrant of execution, to ascertain how much on the whole case was actually due to the party executing, and to issue a warrant for that sum, and no more. Held, further, that the question of limitation could not arise in the case ; because, at the time when the original Court gave the further decree in favour of the plaintiff, her original partial decree was not barred by limitation. The moment that the High Court's decree, which was for a larger sum of money, was passed, plaintiff's decree became incapable of execution under s. 209, Act VIII of 1859, having become merged, as it were, in the decree obtained against her by operation of law. 8.—MISCELLANEOUS.

——1.—General.

(1)—Settlement — Long possession.—Long possession itself does not give a title to settlement if the parties asking for the settlement do not comply with the requirements of the law. GOLAK CHANDRA CHOWDHRY v. ALI MOLLAH, 8 B.L.R. 528, Note.

(2)—Lease—Term of settlement — Meaning of.—Plaintiffs claimed the land in suit under a lease of 1863 made for the term of settlement. The settlement was made for 10 years. The Government extended the settlement by 7 years more. Held that the lease lapsed at the end of 10 years, as there could be no reasonable doubt that the parties intended the lease to be for 10 years, the term of settlement announced to them by the Settlement Officer. MAHOMED BUX v. OULIYA, 27 P.R. 1873.

(3)—Presumption of invalid lakhiraj—Settlement with lakhirajdar.—Where land is resumed as invalid lakhiraj, there is no provision of law which compels Government, under a decree of the Civil Court, to make a settlement with the ex-lakhirajdar if for some reason of its own, it declines to do so. BHIKU SING v. THE GOVERNMENT, 8 B.L.R. 529, Note, 10 W.R. 296=13 B.L.R. 119, Note. [R., 8 B.L. R. 524=17 W.R. 145.]

(4)—Settlement—Power of Revenue Board—Commissioner.—A settlement of resumed lakhiraj land made by a Collector "subject to the orders of the Board of Revenue," may be set aside by that Board. Under the Board's rules, a Commissioner has authority to set aside such a settlement, and is limited to no time in the exercise of his powers of revision. HARLAL TEWARI v. THE COLLECTOR OF BHAGULPORE, 3 B.L R. App. 82=12 W.R. C.

(5)—Limitation—Act XIII of 1848—Settlement award—Suit to set aside—Adjudication.—Act XIII of 1848 applies only to suits for contesting the justice of an award as between the contending parties, and not suits for the purpose of amending a settlement, and establishing the rights of persons who were not parties contesting between themselves before the Collector. KOMUL KISSEN SURKHUL v. BISSONATH CHUCKERBUTTY, B.L.R. Sup. Vol. App. 5=W.R.F.B. 128.

(6)—New settlement, effect of, on rights recorded or acquired at old settlement.—A new settlement could not take away from any tenant rights acquired under or recorded in the old settlement. AZMUT ALI KHAN v. HARNAM, 61 P.R. 1875.

(7)—Agreement in first settlement regarding absentee and resident owner out of possession—Agreement not repeated in subsequent settlement, effect of—Abandonment—Limitation.—It is a general rule that settlement agreements are only intended to last for term of the settlement in which they are made, unless a different meaning can be gathered from the context. Two brothers N and S who had been originally entitled to several plots of land in a village, were out of possession of them, at the time of the first settlement of the village which was only for a term of ten years, the former residing in the village, and the latter being recorded as an absentee. It was provided in the wajib-ul-arz of the settlement, that the absentees on their return would be entitled to recover their lands upon payment of losses, and with regard to N, there was a distinct agreement on the part of two of the proprietors holding a portion of his share, that they would restore it to him when he was in a position to cultivate the land with his own ploughs and cattle. In the revised settlement (which took place ten years after the first settlement), neither the agreement with respect to absentees, nor that with regard to N's holding was repeated. More than 12 years after the deaths of N and S, the sons of N claimed to recover their father's and uncle's share in the land (S having left no issue) held by defendants on the basis of the agreement in the first settlement, urging that their cause of action under it only arose when they were in a position to cultivate the land with their own cattle and ploughs, a position which they had only recently been able to assert. Held that their claim to succeed to their uncle's (S's) share as his nearest heirs was barred by limitation as he died upwards of 12 years ago; that the special agreement relied on by them had ceased to be operative by efflux of time, as they omitted to enforce the conditional promise contained in the wajib-ul-arz within the period of the currency of the first settlement, and as a similar agreement was not embodied in the papers of next settlement, and that they must be deemed to have abandoned their rights in the ancestral property by conduct, as they raised no objection when, during the second settlement, their father's and uncle's lands were partitioned by the sons of the proprietor (who held it during the first settlement) though they remained in the village at the time. ARORA v. MOHRA, 114 P.R. 1880.

(8)—*Suit to contest enhancement of rent—*Wajib-ul-arz — Effect of.—A cultivator who brings a suit to contest an enhancement of rent by the zemindar is not affected by the usage of the village, as laid down in the wajib-ul-arz to which he was no party. HAKEEM SYUD MEHUR ALI v. KUNHYEE, 1 Agra Rev. 12.

operations must be considered to be in progress in any Parganna within the meaning of s. 22, Act XIX of 1865, and s. 17, Act XXXIII of 1871, as long as the sanction of Government has not been given to the record of rights and the assessment, and the special jurisdiction of the Financial Commissioner has not been withdrawn; and consequently appeals during that period lie to the Financial Commissioner and not to the Chief Court. FATTA v. KALA, 39 P.R. 1874.

(10)—Settlement—Proprietors, unwillingness of, to engage for revenue—Farm of land, grant of, to third party—Right of successors in title to proprietors to recover possession—Limitation.—Certain land had been given in farm for a fixed period, to the person through whom the defendants claimed a proprietary title, after an offer of settlement with its proprietors (the ancestors of the plaintiffs) had been made and declined. Held, that a suit for recovery of possession would lie on the expiration of the farm, notwithstanding the non-payment of malikana by persons deriving title from the farmer; and that plaintiffs' suit was not barred by their not suing to set aside what purported to be a transfer of proprietary right to the defendants, of which they had no notice. PHULA v. KRISHNA, 10 P.R. 1874. [Appr., 36 P.R. 1885; D., 41 P.R. 1881.]

(11)—Lease for term of settlement continues till re-settlement.—In cases where lands are leased for the term of a settlement, the Government assessment and many other considerations besides the mere number of years enter into the calculation, and the parties usually look to change of terms merely on Government changing its terms, and, consequently, such leases are good until re-settlement, though the term of years for which the settlement was made, has expired. STAINES v. HURBHUJ, 41 P.R. 1870. [D., 27 P.R. 1873.]

(12)—Voluntary settlement — Revocation of trusts.—Where an unmarried person created, by a voluntary settlement, trusts for himself for life and, after his death, for his issue and widows with ultimate trusts over, with a provision therein for the revocation of the trusts with the trustee's consent, and after his subsequent marriage, executed a deed of revocation, held, upon the trustee refusing to hand over the property, that the settlement could not be revoked, as there was an infant beneficiary in the person of his minor wife. GOLAM YASSEIN v. THE OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL, 8 C. 887. [R., U.B.R. 1892-1896, Vol. II, 645; D., 133 P.R. 1889.]

trustees including himself, upon trust to pay the whole of the net rents and profits thereof to the settlor, and upon his death—(a) to pay 2 annas in the rupee thereof to his wife for maintenance during her life; (b) to pay 2 annas and 4 pies in a rupee to each of his five sons (one of whom was appointed a trustee) during their respective lives and after their respective deaths to their respective lives and their respective children; (c) to pay 1 anna and 2 pies in the rupee to each of his two daughters during their respective wives and after their respective deaths to their respective children and in the absence of their children, their share to go to the settlor's heirs; and (d) to allow the settlor's brother and his wife to live in the loft of one of the settled properties, without rent until their deaths. The settlor's wife and one of his daughters died in his lifetime, and on his death on the 5th October 1902 the defendants 16 and 17 were the only children of the pre-deceased daughter surviving her. Upon the admissions of the parties and on evidence, the Court found that the trustees assented to act as trustees by simply executing and registering the settlement and the settlor continued to collect the rents and profits in the same manner as he had done before: Held, (1) that as the settlor could have transferred the properties to the four trustees in the books of the Municipality and of the Collector and could also have caused bills of rent from tenants to be made out in their joint names, he had not done everything he could have done in order to transfer possession. The settlement was, therefore, void and inoperative, according to Mahomedan law; (2) that upon reading s. 6 of the Trusts Act with s. 2 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, the expression in s. 6 of the Trusts Act "should transfer trust property to trustees" does not affect the rule of Mahomedan law and means act of conveyance to settlor and others but s. 6 of the Trusts Act does not affect any rule of Mahomedan law as to deeds of gift but renders possession necessary, and the settlement fails as a deed inter vivos; (3) that as the settlement as a whole is not consistent with a testamentary disposition to take effect after settlor's death, it fails as a testamentary disposition also; and the children of the settlor's pre-deceased daughter are entitled to no rights under the settlement. part of a proprietor to divest himself absolutely of his proprietary title, before the Courts should hold that, by the acceptance of a specified sum as Huq malikana, he has no title to prefer his proprietary claim, when a new settlement is about to be made. The Settlement Regulation provides carefully for the preservation of the rights of parties who, being proprietors, are excluded from motives of policy or other temporary reasons from engaging for the payment of Government Revenue. On the construction of an ikrarnama executed at the time of settlement, and of a roobkaree settlement, it was held that an agreement therein referred to was only binding on the plaintiffs for the currency of the settlement. DIAL SINGH v. JAWAHIR SINGH, 2 Agra 108.

(2)—Settlement—Roobakaree—Construction.—On the construction of a Settlement Roobakaree it was held that the arrangement under it was to continue for the period of settlement, and no longer, and that the respondents had acquired a hereditary and transferable interest as cultivators of the land by the acquiescence of the zemindar in the action of the Settlement Officer. On this view the Settlement Officer was held to be at liberty to settle the estate direct with the representatives of the original proprietors. IKRAM ALI KHAN v. LUDWA, 2 Agra 113.

(3)—Act XI of 1859, s. 37—Settlement, meaning of — Permanent settlement. — The word "settlement" as used in the first paragraph of s. 37 of Act XI of 1859 refers not to the permanent settlement, but to the settlement which took place after resumption by Government of the lands previously held as lakhiraj. RAJ CHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. SHAIKH BUSHEER MAHOMED, 24 W.R. 476. [R., 10 C.W.N. 503.]

(4) — Settlement proceedings — Temporary settlement—Proprietary right—Maliki allowance — Co-sharer. — A settlement of a talook, although temporary, made with a person professing to be a proprietor, confers a proprietary right and not a limited interest; and a party admitted to a share in the settlement with a Maliki allowance, becomes a co-sharer in the proprietary interest. MR. W. G. N. POGOSE v. AOZAN BIBEE, 18 W.R. 274.

(5)—Grant of taluq upon which a 'hat' used to be held—Whether a monopoly—Calculation.—Although the Government settles a taluq, upon which 'hat' has been held for many years, the Government only grants the lands included in the taluq. The fact of such settlement being arrived at by taking into calculation the profits of the 'hat' does not amount to any grant of tolls; for, the only reason for looking at the tolls was to ascertain the value of the lands. Such a settlement does not imply a monopoly, which will enable the holder, to restrain other persons from setting up a market anywhere close by. RAKHAL DAS ADDY v. DURGA SUNDARI DASI, 17 C. 458.

(6)—Maafee grant—Sale of rights and interests of one of several zemindars—Right of auction-purchaser to claim settlement.—The auction-purchaser of the rights and interests of one of several zemindari who, at the time of the purchase, held only certain nankar land in lieu of their zemindari right during the continuance of the maafee grant by Government to another party, stands in the place of the zemindar, not in respect of nankar land only, but in respect of all the right to settlement as zemindar, after the maafee grant comes to an end. GOKUL PERSHAD v. RUGHO NATH, 3 Agra 245.

See ABSENTEE, 6 P.R. 1871.

——3.—Effect of Settlement.

(1)—Resumed maafee land—Settlement of—Temporary holder—Original holder—Right of settlement—Limitation.—Where a revenue settlement of a resumed maafee land is made with a stranger in consequence of the real owner refusing to fulfil the revenue engagements, held that the right of the former to enjoy the property extended only up to the expiration of the term of such settlement, after which the original owner would be entitled to it, and that his exclusion for that term would not bar his claim to be re-admitted. MAHOMED ATAOOL-LAH v. MAHOMED MOHIB-OOL-LAH, 1 Agra 231.

(2)—Lakhiraj land in Government khas mehal, holder of on resumption, liability of, to pay rent.—The defendants in this case were holders of certain invalid lakhiraj land within a Government khas mehal which was resumed. The revenue authorities, under the provisions of the Reg. VII of 1822, while they settled the whole estate settled and assessed the said lands also. The lower appellate Court had held that the defendant, having failed to sue in a Civil Court to set aside the settlement by the Revenue authorities or under Act X of 1859 for getting the rents mitigated or re-settled, was bound to pay the rents demanded according to the jumabundee; and the High Court was of opinion that the lower appellate Court was right in its decision. HURO PERSHAD CHOWDHRY v. SHAMA PERSHAD ROY CHOWDHRY, 6 W.R. Act X, Rul. 107.

(3)—Lakhirajdar in Assam — His status—Settled estate.—Whatever might have been the position of the Lakhirajdar under the ancient Governments of the country, it is quite clear that he is now entitled to manage his lands in any manner he pleases consistently with the existing Regulations, and, as holder of a resumed lakheraj grant which has been settled with him by the Government at half jumma, he is entitled to eject a tenant whose occupation does not extend over a period of more than five years and who has no lease of any kind to support his title. JULLOW SURMA PATWAREE v. MADHUB RAM ATOI BOORHA BHUKUT, 16 W.R. 202.

(4)—Resumption by Government—Subsequent joint settlement—Presumption.—The mere fact that a settlement after resumption by Government was made with 13 persons jointly does not raise a presumption that the 13 persons had equal rights, especially when the settlement proceedings clearly indicated that the settlement was made jointly with the whole without prejudice to title. GOOROO CHURN PODDAR v. HAFEEZA BIBEE, 7 W.R. 366.

(5)—Farm made by Government on account of recusancy of settlement, maintainability of.—A farm made by Government on account of recusancy of settlement will be maintained, notwithstanding dispute and decision as to proprietary right in the Courts. AMEEROONNISSA KHATOON v. MOULVIE ABDOOL ALI, 2 W.R. 136.

(6)—Co-sharers' settlement with Collector—Absent co-sharer's representative in possession—Suit for possession.—The Collector called upon certain co-sharers in a zemindari to state whether they agreed to settle for themselves, and take the share of the absent co-sharer, G, as zemindar, and they having signified their assent, a settlement was made accordingly. G afterwards returned, and although he did not apply to the Collector to give him his share and to make settlement with him, he did apply for the proceeding which is called Dakhil Kharij, and had his name entered as one of the proprietors of the property. Subsequently the Government issued a notification by which it was declared that all existing settlements were continued for a further period of thirty years. G then sold his share to the defendant who got into possession of that share. The co-sharers sued to recover possession of it. Held that they took settlement of G's share, not in any sense adversely to him but expressly as zemindars or, in a sense, as trustees. Whatever the proceedings might have been which it was necessary for G to take if he had been out of possession, as he or his purchaser had got into possession, the plaintiffs must show their right before they could be restored to possession. ABHEEMUNNO DOBEY v. RUNGODHUR KUR, 20 W.R. 222.

(7)—Settlement of lands—Government, rights of—Sale—Subsequent permanent settlement—Suit by purchaser—Limitation.—In respect of lands settled by them, Government have nothing more than a right of action by virtue of their being proprietors, and not the right of action of an auction-purchaser; and only the former right passes by the settlement. Where A, who buys the benefit of a settlement of certain land for 10 years, sells his rights to B with whom Government, subsequently makes a permanent zemindari settlement, and the purchaser of the latter's title sues for possession of certain specified land, held that the question is one of private right and plaintiff does not stand in the position of Government in respect of the Statute of Limitation. RUGHOONATH SURMAH v. GOBIND CHUNDER ROY, 14 W.R. 170.

(8)—Re-settlement of land by Government as ruling power with those entitled to such settlement under Reg. XI of 1825 and Act XXXI of 1858—Effect.—Quære.—Whether a subsequent settlement of land by the Government, as the ruling power, with the owners of the property entitled to such settlement under Reg. XI of 1825 and Act XXXI of 1858, if made subsequent to a judgment of the High Court relating to such land, may be viewed as having conferred upon the owners a fresh right. MODHU SUDAN KUNDU v. PROMODA NATH ROY, 20 C. 732.

(9)—Resumption—Settlement—Under-tenures.—The settlement of revenue in consequence of resumption under Reg. XIX of 1793. cannot confer a new estate upon the lakhirajdars, but merely fixes and limits the demand as respects revenue originally chargeable. Such resumption and settlement, therefore, do not extinguish under-tenures. PRATAP NARAIN MOOKERJEE v. MADHU SUDAN MOOKERJEE, 8 B. L.R. 197 = 16 W.R. 35. [F., 21 W.R. 327.]

(10)—Settlement of talookdaree rights with agreement for re-settlement—Refusal by Talookdar to re-settle at increased rent—Subsequent settlement with him by Government—Effect.—The Government as zemindars of certain lands made a settlement with the plaintiff recognising him as talookdar for a certain period, and agreed also to re-settle with him at the end of that period. At the end of the first settlement, the plaintiff having refused to re-settle at an increased rate, the jumma was put up to auction, but before a settlement was made with any other person, the plaintiff agreed to pay the amount of the highest bid, and Government re-settled with him upon the former conditions and upon the former description of the nature of the talook. Held, the effect of the transaction was that the Government renewed the contract, and placed the plaintiff exactly in the position in which he would have stood if he had never refused to pay the increased rent demanded by Government. OGNEE COOMAR ROY v. KUMOLA KANT ROY, 11 W.R. 38.

(11)—Settlement by Government, whether permanent or farming—Acceptance of farming lease subject to right of Government—"Abadkari talookdari" rights not affected—Meaning of 'abadkari talookdari.'—The decision of this special appeal turned on the meaning of the terms "abadkari talookdari" that occurred in the lease in this case. Agreeing with the plaintiff's contention, the lower appellate Court held that the terms did not convey any talookdari rights but merely those of an abadkari. The first Court had held, as the defendant contended, that the defendant's tenure was one with talookdari rights and not one of an abadkar only, andthat no intermediate settlement of Government could affect the talookdari right

The High Court held that the lower appellate Court was wrong and concurred with the first Court. A Government settlement, whether permanent or farming, so far from destroying the rights of a talookdar, always preserves them, if there be really a dependent tenure. Neither the acceptance of farming leases by a person qua farmer subject to the Government proprietary right, nor the sale of the Government right, in any way ipso facto extinguishes talookdari rights existing in the abadkari talookdar in that capacity, if otherwise valid. HURO PERSHAD BHUTTACHARJEE v. BHYRUB CHUNDER MOJOOMDAR, 8 W.R. 391.

(12)—Right of inferior proprietors over village forest and waste lands.—The action of the settlement authorities in conferring inferior proprietary rights was directed to giving the inferior proprietor as full proprietary power over the villages held by them as was secured to the zemindars themselves over the rest of their estate, subject only to the payment to the zemindar of a fixed annual sum. The right of the inferior proprietors extended over the forest and waste lands within their village boundaries to the exclusion of the zemindar. DAHARAJ SINGH v. TRIBHUBAN SINGH, 2 C.P.L.R. 25.

(13)—Effect of settlement—Claims not considered at settlement—Right to sue for share in property granted—Effect of settlement—Settlement in equal shares to members of family—Grant amounting to partition.—Persons whose claims were not considered at the settlement cannot sue for their shares in the property granted unless they were entitled at the time of the settlements to interests in the mouza granted of the same nature as those upon consideration of which the Settlement Officer awarded the mouza. [R., 13 C.P.L.R. 81.] Where, at the settlement, the proprietary rights in a village were granted not jointly but in equal shares to the members of a family the grant of itself amounted to a partition among the members thereof. TULSIRAM v. GIR LAHARI, 3 C.P.L.R. 109. [R., 13 C.P.L.R. 81.]

(14)—Settlement—Effect of—No breaking up of pre-existing rights.—The effect of an award at settlement is not to break up any pre-existing co-parcenary rights and to make the share conferred the separate property of the person on whom it is conferred. If the award is in favour of a widow, on her death, the estate devolves on the heirs of the last full owner and not necessarily on the heirs of her husband. RAMPERSHAD TIWARI v. (2)—Alluvion—Gradual accretion—Ownership—Issues—Burden of proof.—At the time of the permanent settlement, the river Gunduck divided mouzah Sohagpore from the village of Doomree. In 1837, the river, whether by gradual recession or sudden shifting, got into its southern channel, and a quantity of chur land to the north of that channel was then resumed by Government and settled with the zemindar of Sohagpore, who remained in undisturbed possession till 1848, when the river having returned to the northern channel, the deara land so settled was claimed by proprietors on the southern side of the river, but was adjudged in favour of the zemindar of Sohagpore under Act IV of 1840. On a question as to the ownership of the land in dispute, held, that the proper issues to be tried were (1) whether the land was settled in 1837 with the zemindar of Sohagpore as proprietor of alluvion which had gradually accreted to his estate or upon what other grounds ; and (2) whether there had been, at the permanent settlement and since then, any clear usage that the main channel of the Gunduck should be the boundary of the zemindaries is question. Held, also, that the burden of proving gradual accretion was on the zemindar of Sohagpore and the burden of proving the existence of the usage was on the zemindar of

(2)—Maafee land— Resumption —Settlement with ex-maafeedar—Right of ex-maafeedar.—A plot of maafee land being resumed was settled with the ex-maafeedar, who engaged for the Government revenue for the term of settlement. The settlement with the ex-maafeedar was made under s. 5, Reg. XIII of 1825, and therefore, under the rules then in force, para 151, Circular Order of the Sudder Board of Revenue —they were entitled to settlement. Held that the mere fact of the last settlement having expired would not deprive them of the right of being assessed with revenue as proprietors of maafee land, but where there had been a grant of the soil and possession taken and long continued thereunder, the ownership thereof rests in the grantee, although the grant as to exemption from payment of revenue may be invalid and subject to assessment. KOONWER SINGH v. SHIB DYAL, 3 Agra 297.

(4)—Ghatwallee tenure, resumption of, by Government—Claim by former holder as proprietor—Subsequent settlement by Government with another—Former holder's right of suit—Limitation.—After the resumption of a ghatwallee tenure by Government, H, the former holder of it, claimed settlement as proprietor; but the Government offered him a lease on finding security. Such security not having been furnished, Government entered into a temporary settlement with one J who entered into possession. With this J, Government subsequently settled the land permanently. The present suit was brought by an heir of H seeking to set aside the settlement with J and for a declaration of plaintiff's right to have a settlement concluded with him. The High Court held that plaintiff had not been in possession for 20 years and his temporary possession as a farmer was lost by his own refusal to furnish security. The right of suit in the plaintiff, if any, by virtue of his position as a dispossessed Jagheerdar, was independent of the action of the Revenue authorities, and at the time when the plaintiff at last thought fit to call on the Civil Court to recognise the same, he was found to have not been in possession since 1841 for a period of more than 20 years. Also, there is no law or invariable practice binding the Revenue authorities irrevocably, or such as would lead the Civil Court to bind those authorities, and, in this view, plaintiff's case should fail even if he had sought in time, and he had not shown that he could claim to force himself on the (5)—Reg. VII of 1822— Suit to establish right to settlement—Limitation—Decision on point of limitation—Court may go into merits.—This was a suit by plaintiff to recover a share of malikhana paid over by the Collector to defendants. The Revenue authorities had considered the defendants and not the plaintiffs entitled to settlement under the provisions of Reg. VII of 1822 and other settlement laws. It was this decision which deprived plaintiff of settlement and also of malikana. Under the circumstances, it was obviously the plaintiff's duty, under the provisions of Reg. VII of 1822, to obtain such settlement by the aid of the Civil Courts together with the reversal of the orders of the Revenue Courts in defendant's favor within the time allowed by law, viz., 12 years. And, as he had not done this, the plaintiff was properly held to have been barred by the law of limitation. It was also contended in this case that, when the lower appellate Court decided the case on limitation, it should not have gone into the merits at all, but the High Court observed that it cannot be laid down as a general rule that, whenever a case is decided on limitation, it is not competent to the Court to go into the merits. There may be many such cases where it would be most right and necessary that the merits should also be gone into. SHIBO DOORGA CHOWDHRAIN v. SYUD HOSSEIN ALI CHOWDHRY, 6 W.R. 218.

(6)—Possession, Right of—Talook—Presumption—Churs—Enhancement — Notice.—A was the owner of a talook in a zemindari which was purchased by the Government at an auction sale for arrears of revenue. The Government did not cancel the talook, but settled it with A for twelve years. When the term expired, Government refused to make a new lease with A, and, instead, leased it for a year to B. Held that the refusal of Government to settle the land with A in no way affected his right to a settlement on the expiration of the lease to B. When a Zemindar sues to enhance the rent of a talookdar, and specifies certain churs as part of the land, the rent of which is to be enhanced, he, by implication, must be considered to admit that the tenant has some valid tenure or right of occupancy in the land mentioned in the notice. The period of limitation which bars the claim to a settlement does not begin to run so long as the proprietary right of the zemindar is formally recognized by the revenue authorities (e.g., by temporary settlements), and no permanent settlement is made with any other person. The payment of malikana is not the only method in which a proprietary right can be recognized. But the keeping of the malikana in deposit, as in this case, for the benefit of the recorded proprietors generally, is a sufficient recognition of a sharer's proprietary rights. The proprietor of a resumed lakheraj with whom a permanent settlement was made subject to the confirmation of the Commissioners, gave a mokurruree lease of the lands for valuable consideration, before the proceedings were returned by the Commissioner. The Commissioner declined to confirm the settlement for more than 10 years, but subsequently the Board of Revenue interfered and ordered that the settlement should be permanent. Held, that the proprietor gave the pottah on the supposition that the settlement was a permanent one, and that she could not afterwards turn round upon the lessee and say that she had given what she had no power to give because the settlement with her at the time of granting the lease was temporary and not permanent. Cl. 11, s. 9, Reg. I of 1824, refers to lands which at one time appertained to an estate which has been permanently settled, but, having been severed from it, have become the property of Government. Under s. 14 of Reg. I of 1824, which relates to fuel lands, the Government has no right to take them on the same terms as lands taken, under s. 9, for purposes of salt manufacture. (6)—Sanad on summary settlement, whether revocable by Government—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Bombay Act, VII of 1863.—S. 7 of Bombay Act VII of 1863 contemplates the possibility, in the course of the summary settlement of land revenue, of the occurrence of mistakes as to the ownership of lands, for which exemption (partial or total) from liability to revenue assessment was claimed, and lays down what the legal consequences of such an error should be. The section in nowise disturbs, so far as regards the quit-rent payable, the finality of the sanad as laid down in the 2nd and 6th sections of the Act. There has not been any intention on the part of the Legislature, to permit Government, on the ground of its having fallen into an error as to the ownership, to recede from the settlement, to treat the lands as Khalsa or sarkari or muzmun and to re-assess the lands. What shall be the legal results of mistakes as to ownership has been, as stated above, specially provided by the Act itself, but the question was left open whether to Government, or other parties to the summary settlement of claims under Bom. Act VII of 1863, a Civil Court can give relief either by reforming or cancelling the sanads against mistakes found to exist therein, other than those relating to ownership. DOLSANG BHAVSANG v. (7)—Temporary settlement, dependent talookdars under, if liable to ejectment at close of settlement.—Plaintiffs in this suit, alleging that they were dependent talookdars in the estate of the defendant, and that the latter had illegally dispossessed them, sued to recover possession of their talook. The High Court confirmed the decrees of their claims given to the plaintiffs by the lower Courts. Although the talookdars had been re-admitted to certain temporary settlements for a certain number of years only, it could not therefore be taken that the talookdars were liable to ejectment at the close of such settlement. If a ryot holds a right of occupancy, but at a variable rate of rent, it does not follow that because he enters into an agreement to pay a certain rate of rent for a number of years, he loses his rights of occupancy at the end of that time. HURO GOBIND DOSS v. KALA CHAND SHAHA, 6 W. R. Act X, Rul. 26.

(8)—Dependent talookdar under temporary settlement—Collector's acts placing settlement in abeyance, not dispossession for purposes of limitation — Dispossession by purchaser at sale.—When a dependent talookdar holding under a temporary settlement, has that settlement placed in abeyance by the fact of the Collector taking the collections of khas, into his own hands, the Collector's acts cannot be deemed to amount to one of dispossession from which the period of limitation can be calculated. The collections of a mehal khas and the issue of the necessary orders to that effect pending orders as to future settlement do not necessarily involve ejectment or repudiation of former talookdaree right or tenure. On the other hand, the instruction of the Revenue Office was that talookdaree rights should be respected. Consequently, dispossession by the new purchaser can alone be taken to have given a cause of action. Limitation will thus have to be reckoned only from the date when the purchaser, after the Collector had ceased to hold khas, had himself made collections and so created a cause of action by dispossession of the former talookdar. The plaintiff brought a summary suit to be recorded proprietor. His claim was granted but he was directed to pay certain dues, "huq zemindari," to the defendants as provided for in the settlement record. On appeal this was confirmed but plaintiff was told to lodge a regular suit for correcting the settlement record if he considered the entry to be erroneous. This order was dated 27th October, 1866. The regular suit was lodged on 4th April, 1870. Held that, if the order of October 1866 was considered a summary order or decision, then a regular suit to set aside that order should have been brought within one year from the date of the order. If the order was considered an award in a contested case, the suit was barred by cl. 6, s. 1, Act XII of 1859, for when it was lodged more than 3 years had elapsed from the date of that order. Plaintiff sued for arrears of revenue. Held that the order of the Settlement Officer passed in 1867 was an award given in a contested case, and a suit to set aside such award should have been brought within three years from the date of the award; and as defendant's father or defendant took no steps to set it aside by an appeal to proper authority, the defendant as a representative of his father was bound by the award. that the Judge was wrong in having refused to hear the appeal. Also, the Settlement Officer before whom the proceedings were originally laid had no power to entertain the application. S. 8 of Act XIV of 1863 empowers the Settlement Officer merely to decide suits of the nature mentioned in s. 23 of Act X of 1859 or in Act XIV of 1863; and, under s. 9 of the last-mentioned Act, he has power to determine dispute regarding rates of rent payable to the zemindar, but neither of the above sections gives him the power to try a right to resume and assess. (6)—Act XIV of 1863, ss. 8 and 10—Suit for enhancement of rent preferred to superior officer—Reference of such suit to another whether legal—Act X of 1859, ss. 150, 162.—A suit for enhancement of rent, which had been originally preferred to a Covenanted Settlement Officer, was referred by him, to a Settlement Deputy Collector who was neither employed in making or revising settlements of the land revenue nor invested with the powers of a Collector under s. 8 of Act XIV of 1863. Whether the superior officer (who referred the case) had jurisdiction to try the suit by reason of his having been invested with the special powers under s. 8 of the Act was not clear. The Deputy Collector decreed the plaintiff's claim which was confirmed by the lower appellate Court with certain modifications. Held, on special appeal by the defendant, that under s. 10 of Act XIV of 1863, if a suit for enhancement of rent be brought before any officer, empowered under s. 8 of the Act to hear the same, such suit shall be heard and determined by such officer, and it is not provided that he may refer it for trial and decision to another. The powers which the Local Government may confer on any officer employed in making or revising settlement under s. 8 of Act XIV of 1863 are the powers referred to in s. 150 of Act X of 1859, and are distinct from such powers as those given to a Collector by cl. 2 of s. 162 of the said Act. mentioned in s. 23 of Act X, or in Act XIV of 1863. There is no authority given to Government to invest Settlement Officers with any other of the powers which are vested in a Collector by Act X of 1859. Consequently a proceeding of a Settlement Officer purporting to be a proceeding under s. 28 of Act X of 1859, is void on the face of it for want of jurisdiction. THAKOOREE v. (9)—Powers of Settlement Officer—Board of Administration—Revenue Civil Circular No. 8 of the 11*th February* 1852—Liability of Government for acts of its servant—Grant of zemindari by Government, what passes under.—The Circular of 1852 authorized Settlement Officers to grant the zemindar proprietary rights in Khana Khalee or Government estates to private persons, and a wide discretion was entrusted to such officers in this matter. But the Circular did not refer to all lands which were the property of Government, but only to those which were used for agricultural purposes or which might by reclamation or otherwise be used for such purposes. It did not include lands held by Government for public purposes. The acts of a Government Officer bind the Government only when he is acting in the discharge of a certain duty within the limits of his authority, or, if he exceed that authority, when the Government in fact or in law directly or by implication ratifies the excess. (8 M.I.A. 554, F.) When the Government owns the zamindari interest in a village and grants that interest to a private person, nothing is intended to pass by the grant except what the Government holds as zemindar. In this case, it appeared that the Settlement Officer, purporting to act under Circular No. 8 of 1852, granted the zamindari of the village of R to one D without reserving to Government the plots in dispute which were, in 1852 and previously, the property of Government and in the possession of the Canal department, and used by that department for the purposes of the Western Jumna Canal. Plaintiffs as successors in title to the said zamindary claimed inter alia the plots in dispute. It was not proved that the grant of these plots to D was ratified in fact or in law actually or by implication by the Government. Nor did the plaintiffs show any act or admission on the part of the officers of Government since the date of the grant, which would have the effect of estopping the Government from contesting their claim. Held:—that the Settlement Officer exceeded his authority in granting the zamindari without reserving the said plots, and that, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim the same. (10)—Grant of land to lambeardar by way of remuneration—Arrangement by Settlement Officer and village community—Rights of lambeardar under terms of grant at settlement.—Plaintiff alleged that, under the grant made at settlement to him as the Chief lambeardar of the village, he was entitled to receive the half share of the produce of the land in question and sued to recover the value of the share from defendant. The question arose whether the grant made at settlement to the chief lamberdar as an Inam included only the Government revenue assessed upon the land set apart for the purposes of the grant or extended also to the landlord's right to manage the land and receive the rent. The Chief Court held that the allotment of a plot of common land to the Chief lamberdar by way of remuneration for his services to the villages was usually a matter of arrangement by the Settlement Officer in consultation with the village community and with their consent, and that while it was usual to make over the land to the Chief lamberdar and to allow him to cultivate it for his own benefit without payment of revenue or malikana, this was not necessarily always the case, and therefore the terms upon which any particular grant was made must be gathered from the circumstances of the particular case,and that there was no reason for taking exception in special appeal to the finding of the lower Courts, that by the terms of his grant, the Chief lamberdar was entitled to realise from the cultivators what the proprietors could have realised. In other words, not merely was he the muafidar of the land, but was also entitled to take the rent, or the proprietor's share of the produce. GURBAKSH SINGH v. (2)—Hereditary cultivator—Possession for a long time — Entry in Settlement Record as proprietor—Suit in ejectment.—In a previous suit for rent, the defendant, who was erroneously recorded in the Settlement Record as having proprietary rights, pleaded such rights, and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on this ground, and he was referred to a regular suit to establish his right. Having then obtained a decree establishing such right, the plaintiff brought the present suit in ejectment. Defendant now pleaded that he was a hereditary cultivator. Held that the burden of proving this plea was clearly on the defendant who was not recorded as such in the Settlement paper, but was erroneously recorded as having proprietary rights. His previous assertion, unsuccessfully made, that he was proprietor, placed him in the position of one allegans contraria. But more than that, if nothing had taken place in the way of contest as to the respective rights of the parties, the mere fact of long possession on the part of the defendant would not, as wrongly held by the lower Courts, constitute him a hereditary cultivator. (5)—Forest land, reclamation of—Settlement Records — Jageerdar—Zemindar —Respective rights of.—There was a large tract of jungle which was not assessed, within the area of estate of the plaintiff Jaghirdar. A portion of the jungle tract was reclaimed by the defendants-Zamindars and brought under cultivation. The plaintiff claimed a share of the produce of the newly cultivated land and the defendants contended that the plaintiff's right only extended over the jungle or forest and that, whenever they cut down the forest and cultivate the lands, the proprietary right vested entirely in them and the plaintiff could no longer claim to receive any share of the produce of the lands. As regards this question, the Settlement records provided that the Zamindars and residents of the village might graze their cattle there free of charge and take dry wood for domestic purposes and that the Zamindars had the right to cut down the forest and jungle for the purpose of bringing the land under cultivation without the consent of the jaghirdar, in which case the proprietary rights in the land vested entirely in them and the jaghirdar had nothing to say to it. Held that the reasonable construction to be put upon the settlement record was that the Zamindars were the original owners and entitled to proprietary possession and that the jaghirdar was only entitled to the income from the forest and jungle tract so long as it existed. Held also that no such custom as alleged by plaintiff existed, viz., that jaghirdars, who are not proprietors, have a right to compensation for forest rights destroyed by breaking up of "Khol" land. Shamilat Land.

See COMMON LAND.

(1)—Shamilat land—Occupation—Adverse or permissive.—A person, by merely occupying shamilat land for more than seventeen years, does not acquire by prescription a title to it. A distinction exists between private land and common land; in regard to the former, a presumption may arise that the owner gave up his right to the land, while, in the latter case, there is no such presumption. Where a majority of the proprietors object to the defendants remaining on the land, a decree in ejectment must be passed conditioned on payment of compensation by the plaintiffs. GOLAB SINGH v. HEERA LALL, 92 P.R. 1866.

(2)—Right of allocating shamilat land, given by wajib-ul-arz to Lumberdars—Allotment on partition between co-parceners.—The land in suit was admittedly shamilat deh newly broken up. Plaintiff claimed on the allegation that the land bordered on his cultivated field and was first broken up by him; the defendants rested their defence on the same averments with regard to themselves. The wajib-ul-arz gave to the Lumberdars the right of allocating shamilat lands to cultivators. It also reserved to a co-parcener the prior right to break up land bordering on his cultivated field. It was however not clear whether the sanction of the Lumberdar was necessary to entitle the cultivator to break up shamilat land not situated on the border of his field. In the present case, that land was not situate on the border of the cultivated fields of either of the parties, and no priority accrued to either of them on that account. The Chief Court accordingly modified the order of the lower Courts in so far as to declare that the defendants' possession of the land shall not operate to necessitate its allotment to them on a partition of the shamilat lands, the propriety of allotting to them or otherwise having to be determined on grounds other than that of possession. Also, till the making of an application to divide the shamilat, the defendants' possession must be maintained. KURM v. HUSSUN ALI, 34 P.R. 1869.

(3)—Private partition of shamilat by consent of parties—Imperfect Revenue partition—Effect—Distinction between private and imperfect partition and butwara.—A private partition of the shamilat, made by the mutual consent of all concerned, is not of any the less binding effect than an imperfect partition conducted by the Revenue authorities under the rules. If a private partition has been completed and taken effect, and it be established that a particular plot of land fell to a certain proprietor by that partition, then the title of that proprietor in the land is as good as if he held it by a butwara; and a subsequent partition, in the absence of any agreement between the parties to that effect, altering the distribution of land previously divided among the proprietors by a private partition, complete in all its features as above explained, cannot legally be had. There is no difference in the effect of a private and an imperfect partition; but the main distinctions between such partitions and a regular butwara under Reg. XIX of 1814 or Act XIX of 1863, where this Regulation or Act is in vogue, consists in the maintenance of the joint responsibility of the whole village for the Government revenue by the one, while it is put an end to by the other. WALI v. GAMAN, 66 P. R. 1869.

(4)—Shamilat—Dispute as to use of Shamilat land—Rights of minority.—Whatever, by village usage, might be the rights of the disputing sides of a village community, where such dispute had in reality arisen as to the use of the common land, but the dispute was not as to the bona fide use of common land for common purposes arising amongst the co-proprietors, but the use of it for a serai was put forward to cover the real claim, effect must be given to the objection by the minority. (5)—Shamilat granted rent-free—Some of the proprietors whether competent to sue to oust grantee — Application for partition, proper course.—Where the shamilat land of a mouza has been granted as dholi by the proprietors jointly, and the use of such land continues in consequence of such joint grant, one section of the community has not, under all circumstances, a right to bring a suit, against another section, for ouster of the grantee. The proper course for the discontented section would be to apply for a partition. RATU DAS v. INDRAJ, 40 P.R. 1875.

(6)—Village common land—Prescriptive right of user of non-proprietors, for agricultural purposes—Shamilat land—Occupation of portion with consent of proprietors—Survival of right of occupation after partition.—Non-proprietors can, by long use and prescription, obtain a right to the use of part of the common land, whether it is the abadi or the shamilat deh at large, for the purpose of keeping up their agricultural employment such as building a khurli or a bara (cattle trough). A common devolution by the village proprietors of a spot on the shamilat to a particular purpose, e.g., allowing tenants to have a bara there, will, as an arrangement for a common village object, survive a partition and hold good against the individual who gets the spot on such partition. GHOUSA v. ABADAN, 34 P.R. 1877. [F., 152 P.R. 1882; Appr. & D., 11 P.R. 1879, 36 P.R. 1882.]

(7)—Building on shamilat land by malik kabza—Occupation for several years without paying malikana—Non-liability to pay hak bua malikana, &c.—Suit for chowkidari dues not maintainable by proprietor other than lamberdar.—The defendant, who was a malik kabza, built a house on the common land of the village (shamilat deh) and had resided in it ever since. At a partition of the common land eight years before the suit, that portion on which the defendant had his house fell to the plaintiff's share. Plaintiff thereon brought the present suit to recover from the defendant malikana and chowkidari dues. On the facts found, defendant was held to be not liable to pay malikana for the site on which the house stood. He built the house eighteen years ago on shamilat land and had ever since occupied it without paying any malikana. Also, as regards the chouwkidari, notwithstanding the admission of the defendant that, like other proprietors, he was also liable to pay it, his contention, that the plaintiff not being the lamberdar, was not entitled to collect it, was upheld by the Chief Court. MUHAMMAD KHAN v. NUR KHAN, 11 P.R. 1879.

(8)—Forfeiture of rights in—Failure to contribute towards expenses incurred in recovering shamilat land from third party.—The plaintiffs admitting that defendants had rights in shamilat land, claimed that the defendants' right was extinguished, for failure on their part to contribute towards expenses, incurred by plaintiffs in recovering the land from third parties. Held that the claim was not valid. MAULA v. KHUSHIA, 166 P.L.R. 1906.

(8-a)—Rights in — Burden of proof— Waste lands in Jhang District.—The plaintiffs sued for declaration that only members of the Bhutta tribe were entitled to share in the village shamilat lands and the defendants, who were Aroras by caste, had no right in them. There was nothing in the village records, which stated that the lands were shamilat of the village, to indicate that the sales made in favour of the ancestors of the defendants which took place in 1836 and 1851, did not carry with them rights in the shamilat. The sale-deeds were silent as to them. It was not shown that the defendants were excluded from a share in the enjoyment of such profits as might have been derived from the shamilat. Held, that the claim must be dismissed. DUNI CHAND v. MUHAMMAD BAKSH, 8 P.L.R. 1907=36 P.W.R. 1907.

(9)—Trespasser acquiring right to proprietary holding by adverse possession—Right to shamilat land.—In 1863 one G claimed 25 ghumaos of land from S by right of ownership, but the suit was dismissed as barred by limitation, it having been found that S had first obtained possession of G's land in pre-British times. Since then S and his descendants were recorded in revenue and settlement papers as proprietors of the land and the shamilat lands were described as owned by the proprietors. It was contended in this suit that S and his descendants were not entitled to a share in the shamilat land, for even if S. became owner of the 25 ghumaos by adverse possession, it did not follow that he thereby became owner of a proportionate share of the shamilat, and even if G lost his rights in the shamilat at the same time that he lost his rights in the proprietary holding, the former rights should be held to revert to the other co-sharers in the village. Held, that the contention was not valid. (10)—Burden of proof—Presumption of accuracy of entries made in settlement records.—The defendant's ancestor purchased orally a proprietary holding in 1864 and since then the names of the vendee and his heirs appeared in settlement papers as proprietors. There was nothing to show that the sale did not include shamilat lands. The plaintiff claimed exclusive right to such lands. He failed to prove his exclusive possession. Held, that the suit must be dismissed. SANT SINGH v. JWALA SINGH, 10 P.L.R. 1907=34 P.W.R. 1907.

(11)—Portion only of such land purchased from co-sharer—Right of purchaser to claim partial partition of such land.—A purchaser, from a co-sharer in the village of a portion only of the common shamilat land is not entitled to claim partial partition and could not have that plot alone partitioned. Shamilat Land—continued.

the area in dispute. The rule is that, when land is emerged, the person who owns the adjacent land is entitled to get it. (2) That they have been in possession as owners, ever since the area emerged and have reclaimed it. Held, also, that in land acquisition cases persons deliberately omitting to claim the property to be acquired, are accepting the award treating the land as shamilat, are ordinarily estopped from afterwards asserting their rights before the Civil Court. The Revenue authorities did not accept the contention and the land was allotted to a different co-sharer. The plaintiff sued in the Civil Court for a declaration that he was entitled to retain possession of the land by custom. Held that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case. (14)—Common land—Village divided into tarafs and occupied by different tribes—Holdings not equivalent in extent but similar in kind——Settlement Records—Entries in, when not made after full inquiry—Res judicata—Obiter dictum—Admission, when not binding—Statement made by several persons representing all the proprietors—Registration Act, III of 1877, s. 17—Immoveable property—Value not shown to be exceeding Rs. 100—Document merely admitting an antecedent right.—The plaintiffs, Dhamials of the village Jhurmat Khurd in the Rawalpindi District, sued for a declaration of their rights as proprietors of the land in suit in the village and to shares in the common land. It was found that the village was occupied by members of three tribes, the Budhals, who had a taraf of their own, and the Kathrils and Dhamials who had seven tarafs between them, the Kathrils owning three pattis out of it and the Dhamials one. There was nothing to show that the Dhamials acquired their holding in village in any manner different to the Kathrils and Bhudals; their holdings were not equivalent in extent but were presumably similar in kind. At the summary settlement of 1853, the Dhamials were shown as having a share in the shamilat of their taraf. When the settlement of 1860 was proceeding, the Kathrils sued the Dhamials to eject them from the lands in their possession, alleging that the latter were their tenants. The suit was dismissed, but the Court observed in the judgment that the Dhamials had no right in the shamilat. In the regular settlement it was decided that the Dhamials

had no share in the shamilat. In 1868 the Dhamials secured from several Kathril proprietors a stamped aknowledgment that the former were entitled to share in the shamilat. It was contended for the defendants that the document was not admissible in evidence for want of registration. In 1885 settlement the Dhamials were only recorded as malikhan cabza of their proprietary holdings and as tenants ghair maurusi of two shamilat fields. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaration prayed for. The observation in the judgment in 1860 case was a mere obiter dictum and was not res judicata. That the acknowledgment was not inadmissible in evidence, for (1) it was not shown that plaintiff's share in shamilat in 1868 had a money value of Rs. 100, and (2) the document merely admitted antecedent right. (26 P.R. 1891, 95 P.R. 1894, R.) It was not shown that the rights the plaintiffs had in the land and to the shamilat were in any way lost or transferred to the defendants. KALU v. (15)—Grant of shamilat land by Government —"Family"—Meaning of the word used in the grant.—The word "family" has various meanings; and it has to be construed with reference to the context in each particular case. The Government of Punjab made a grant of a certain land, out of the shamilat of a village, to A rent free for life, and it was stipulated that the proprietary right was to remain in the family of the grantee on his demise, subject to assessment. Before this grant was made, the father of A had died, and the brothers of A were not living together as members of a joint family at the time of the grant. Held, since the grant was made under those circumstances to A, in consideration of his personal services as a military man, the word "family" used in the sanad must be taken to be employed in its restricted sense, i.e., as meaning "the wife and children" of the grantee, and not in the more extended sense of a household comprising all the blood relations of the man. JAIMAL SINGH AND NEHAL SINGH v. GURUMUKH SINGH, 20 P.R. 1910=28 P.W.R. 1910=5 Ind. Cas. 898=206 P.L.R. 1910.

(16)—Shamilat—Sale—Interpretation of the deed of sale of original holding.—Held, that the rights of a proprietor in the shamilat of a village are not merely accessory to the land owned by him, and a sale of the latter does not ordinarily convey shamilat rights to the purchaser, unless the contrary intention is clearly and unequivocally established. The onus, in such cases is on the purchaser, and this onus is not discharged by the mere fact that expressions such as noted below have been used in the deed of conveyance. (1) Haq-i-milk-i-khud (which means "right, title and interest"). (2) Shamilat Chah (which is distinct from shamilat deh). (3) Bajami haquq dakhili wakhaiji (which only mean external and internal rights in the area actually sold). Held, also, that an entry in the wajib-ul-arz of a village, to the effect that shamilat will be partitioned in proportion to khewat, does not confer on the vendee any right to get a share in the shamilat not expressly conveyed to him. Held, further, that the facts of vendee's incurring expenses incidental to shamilat, without showing that the vendor was asked but refused or failed to pay, or vendee's getting some compensation under Act I of 1894 for a portion of it or vendee's getting a share of shamilat in incomplete partition proceedings and possessing it for a short time, are insufficient to show that the vendee has also purchased the vendor's share in the shamilat. (17)—Malick-i-Qabza's incompetency to get share in shamilat—Breaking up a bit of shamilat—Onus probandi—Discharge of onus.—The general rule is that a Malick-i-Qabza is not entitled to a share in the shamilat, and the onus of proving that he is entitled lies on him. The mere fact of his having broken a bit of shamilat and having been allowed to retain it on partition of a portion of the shamilat, is not sufficient to discharge this onus, especially where in three successive settlements he is recorded as being a maliki Qabza only. (18)—Partition—Mode of partition of shamilat—To maintain possession—Compensation for turning barani into chahi.—Held, that, at the time of partition of the shamilat, the possession of the share-holders should be maintained only up to the extent of their respective shares therein. But when a share-holder has sunk a well which has changed the land occupied by him from barani into chahi, he is equitably entitled to retain, by way of compensation, some portion of it. In such a case it is advisable to direct the parties to appoint arbitrators to decide what additional share out of the joint holding should be allowed. HUKAM SINGH v. (19)—Village road—Shamilat—Thoroughfare —Encroachment upon village road by a member of the proprietary body—Other members of the same body competent to sue.—Held, that, no member of the proprietary body of a village is authorized to encroach upon the shamilat land devoted to the purposes of a road used for inter-village communication. Although it is a sort of thoroughfare, yet some of the proprietary body can successfully maintain a suit against a trespasser, even if he be a member of the same body, for restoring the land encroached upon by him to its original use, without proving any special damage to themselves, as compared to the rest of the public, as a condition precedent to obtaining a decree to that effect. (1)—Sale-deed—Transfer, in name of vendee with intent to defeat a third person's right to inherit vendor, whether a sham transaction—Consideration for the sale, whether strangers can question.—Basing his claim on a sale-deed from 1st defendant (the mortgagor), plaintiff instituted the suit for redemption. The mortgagee was the second defendant. First defendant died pending the suit and his daughter (the fourth defendant) was brought on record as his representative. In the Court of first instance, defendants 2 and 4 set up the defence that the sale deed to the plaintiff was not really intended to transfer the property to him but was executed by the first defendant merely with the object of depriving his daughter of the said property. The lower Courts found that the sale to the plaintiff was a sham transaction not really intended to convey any property but merely created with intent to defraud the fourth defendant of her title to inherit the property after the lifetime of the first defendant. Held, if depriving his daughter of the property in question were the motive which actuated the first defendant, it would follow that he had an intention of transferring the property to the plaintiffs and, consequently, the sale-deed was not anything that could be termed a sham transaction but, on the other hand, it effectively transferred the property to the plaintiffs, who were, therefore, entitled to being the suit for the redemption of the property and in such a suit by the vendee it was not open to the persons not parties to the sale-deed to question the consideration for the sale. Share-holder.

(1)—Joint Stock Companies—Share-holder—Written acceptance of shares—Act XIX of 1857, Table B—Defendant holding himself out as share-holder.—Suit for the amount due on calls made upon an alleged share-holder in respect of shares taken by him in a Banking Company. Defendant pleaded that he was not a share-holder. There was evidence to the effect that the defendant had attended meetings of the Bank, voted at those meetings, had given a promissory note for the amount due upon certain calls and had held himself out as a share-holder by offering shares for sale, but there was no written acceptance of shares by the defendant as required by Table B of Act XIX of 1857 under which the Bank was registered. Held that if the matter rested on the contract actually entered into, there could be no doubt that the defendant by his own conduct would be precluded from denying that he was a share-holder. But Act XIX of 1857 declares that unless a person does a particular act, i.e., testifies in writing to the acceptance of the shares in a form to be provided by the Company, he shall not be constituted a share-holder. And the present case depended upon the prohibitory words of the Act and not upon the actual transactions of the parties. Defendant therefore could not be deemed to be or held liable as a share-holder. On the one hand, he could not have insisted upon receiving shares (if they had gone up and he was desirous of having them) and, on the other, the Bank could not compel him to pay calls upon them. It was true that the defendant had entered into a special contract to pay certain calls by executing a promissory note. But the liability under that contract was quite distinct from the liability under the general conditions of a share-holder. For the value of the calls covered by the promissory note, the remedy would be by suit upon it. MOHAN LALL v. SECRETARY, UNITED BANK OF INDIA, LTD., 38 P.R. 1868.

In a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract on the ground that, though within the day named in the contract, he had tendered the share certificates with transfer deeds in blank to the defendant, the defendant had refused to accept them or pay the purchase-money, held that the acts necessary to be done on the day fixed in the contract were concurrent, and that, as the plaintiff was able and willing to make a valid transfer on payment of the purchase-money within the specified time, he had done everything that was necessary for him to do and that he was not bound to take any further step, until the purchase-money was paid by the defendant, and that consequently the issue as to readiness and willingness must be found in favour of the plaintiff. (3)—Shares—Blank transfers—Tenders.—On the 19th April, plaintiff sold to defendants sixty shares in the N Bank to be delivered and paid for on Thursday, April 26th. The sold note was as follow: "Baboo Lall Mohun Mullick. Sold by your order, and on your account, to Messrs. Peary Chand Mittra and Sons (Metcalfe Hall) sixty shares in the N Bank at Rs. 4 premium per share. (Sigued) Sree Comar Sircar, Broker." The bought note exactly corresponded. On the 23rd April, plaintiff received from defendants the following: "With reference to the Sixty N Bank shares sold by you, we shall thank you to send us three transfer deeds on Friday next, viz., two for twenty-five shares each and one for ten "shares." On the 26th April plaintiff sent to defendants sixty N Bank shares, some standing in the name of H and some in the name of P, accompanied by transfers, all executed by P alone. These shares were all returned by the defendants, with the following memorandum: "The accompanying shares in the N Bank purchased for delivery to-day are not in order." Later, on the same day, the 26th, plaintiff took personally to defendants the same sixty shares with transfers, executed some by H and some by P, the name of the transferor corresponding number by number with the name in the shares. On this, as on the previous occasion, the name of the transferee was left blank. These shares were also rejected by the defendants as not in order. Plaintiff then, on April 27th, about 1 P.M., had the shares registered in his own name, and, within two hours afterwards, sent them to the defendants with corresponding transfers, and with the following letter: In compliance with request in your memorandum of the 23rd instant, I now send you the sixty shares N Bank, with three transfer deeds, and will feel obliged by your paying the amount to the bearer." The defendants declined to receive the shares, and they were re sold at a loss. The plaintiff never had any personal interest whatever in the shares, either on the 26th or 27th April, and was a mere benami holder for H and P. The articles of association of the N Bank required transfers to be in the form F appended to Act XIX of 1857. The transfers tendered by plaintiff were on each occasion in that form. The defendants swore that the "Friday, the 27th April, mentioned in their memorandum of the 23rd April, was inserted by accident, instead of Thursday," the 26th April, and that they consequently rejected the tender on the 27th. Held (1) that the contract, as it stood on the bought and sold notes, was a contract by the vendor (as in Stephen v. De Medina) that "in consideration of such a sum I will execute any proper conveyance which you tender me;" (2) that the memorandum of April 23rd, coupled with the fact of the vendor having made tenders of transfers of the shares, was evidence enough to show that the vendor bound himself to tender a proper conveyance to his vendees; (3) that the document of conveyance must be complete at the time of tender, or capable of being then made complete; (4) that the transfers, with a blank for the name of the transferee, were incomplete and insufficient, the vendor showing no authority from H and P; (5) that the Court below must deal with the question of fact, whether or no the mention of Friday, the 27th, instead of Thursday, the 26th was a mistake; and semble that, if the defendants had received the blank transfers and acted upon them, the waiver would have rendered them complete. A thereon instituted the present suit for damages sustained by reason of B's not taking delivery of the shares. The first Court found that the contract was not a satta or time-bargain contract as pleaded by B, but rejected the claim on the ground that the shares had not been tendered to the defendant on the day fixed for their delivery, and this decision was affirmed by the District Judge on appeal. Held that the District Judge ought not to have held that the contract in suit was a time-bargain, upon which the bringing of an action is prohibited by Act XXI of 1848. Also he should, on the assumption that the said contract was not an agreement by way of wagering or gaming, have held that in equity it was assignable for a valuable consideration subject to any equities existing between the defendant and the original vendor. Held also that the plaintiff is not always bound to make an actual tender to the defendant in order to establish the allegation of his readiness and willingness to perform his part of the contract. and for money due on account stated. Held, the plaintiffs could not recover as no shares were really bargained for and sold and as a mere form was gone through to deceive the public by making it appear that shares had been sold at a certain price. Held, further, that Courts of justice could not enforce a contract which was made for the purpose of defrauding other persons. Contructive frauds are such acts or contracts as, although not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury on other persons, are yet, by their tendency to deceive or mislead others or to violate private or public confidence, or to impair or injure the public interest, deemed equally reprehensible with positive frauds, and therefore, are prohibited by law as within the same reason and mischief as acts and contracts done malo animo. EASTERN FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION v. PESTANJI CURSETJI SHROFF, 3 B.H.C.O C. 9.

(7)—Sale of shares and re-purchase for future delivery—Forfeiture — Liability of Company for acts of Directors.—On 3-1-1865, the plaintiffs purchased from the defendants, 2,000 shares in the defendants Company at Rs. 15 per cent. premium, and the plaintiffs paid for the same. Simultaneously with the above mentioned sale, the defendants agreed to repurchase from the plaintiffs the same 2,000 shares at Rs. 29½ per cent. premium, to be delivered and paid for between the 1st and 15th days of July then next ensuing. These contracts for re-purchase were signed by three of the directors of the defendant Company, and on the back of one of such contracts was a memo initialled by two of them to the following effect. "Having signed, you have delivered to us a list of the 'share' receipts. We are to receive the same after examining them with the initials which have been made thereon. We are duly to examine and receive the same at the fixed time of July." There were in all 190 letters of allotment, in the names of several persons and for various numbers of shares, endorsed by the original allottees, and initialled by one of the directors. These letters together with receipts for the first call, were handed over to the plaintiffs, by the three directors of the defendant Company who made the contracts. In April, the defendant Company made a fresh call payable on the 4th of May. A list of the names and addresses of the original allottees was made, and notices of forfeiture for non-payment of the call was sent by post to them. As to the 2,000 shares, sold to the plaintiffs, the notices were issued to the original allottees and not to the plaintiffs, whose names did not even find a place in the list mentioned above. On the 27th of May, all the shares upon which this second call was not paid, were declared to be forfeited for the benefit of the Company. The plaintiffs did not of course comply with the call, in respect of the 2,000 shares purchased by them, and in consequence, their shares were declared forfeited. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for damages for the latter's refusal to re-purchase the shares as originally agreed upon. The questions to be determined were:—(i) whether the defendants were bound by the contracts which had been signed by three of their directors on behalf of the Company; and (ii) whether the shares had, before the time for delivery, been legally forfeited for non-payment of a call, and the plaintiffs thereby rendered incapable of performing the contract. It was found that the defendant Company as stated in the memorandum of association, was established, among other objects, for "the purchase and sale of Debentures, Stocks, Shares, of Joint Stock Companies (including the shares of this Company), and other securities, the making loans and advances on such securities as the directors of the Company may think fit." Held that (i) the above object of the Association showed that the contract for re-purchase was within the scope of the authority of the directors; (ii) that the defendants were, therefore, bound by the contracts; (iii) that the defendants were bound to give the plaintiffs the notice of call required by the articles of association; (iv) that the notices given to the original allottees were of no avail as against the plaintiffs; (v) that the defendants were bound to treat the plaintiffs as the holders of those shares; (vi) that in the absence of such notice, there had been no legal forfeiture of the shares by the plaintiffs; and (vii) that, as the defendants refused to re-purchase the shares as contracted by them, they were liable in damages to the plaintiffs to the full extent of the amount indicated by their contract. ORIENTAL FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION v. MERCANTILE CREDIT AND FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION, 3 B.H.C.O.C. 1. [R, 12 B.H. C. 23.]

(8)—Sale of shares — Future delivery — Readiness and willingness.—The plaintiff gave notice to the defendant of his readiness and willingness to deliver certain shares, the subject of a contract contained in a written agreement between the parties upon the due date for the delivery of the shares; and the defendant, even prior to the due date, gave a notice in reply to the plaintiff, that he, for reasons wholly unconnected with the readiness and willingness of the plaintiff, would not accept such shares (on which reasons the defendant did not rely in the lower Court). Held that in such a case, the issue as to the readiness and willingness of the plaintiff was quite immaterial and the defendant had, by his reply notice, exonerated the plaintiff from giving proof of such readiness or willingness. The mere fact that those shares were pledged to a third person would not negative the readiness and willingness on the part of the plaintiff, especially when the shares had fallen in their value, thereby creating an interest on the part of the pledgee to have the shares sold to advantage. (9)—Sale of shares for future delivery—Specific performance—Readiness and willingness.—A share in a company signifies a definite portion of its capital, and a contract to sell a share is a contract to sell and transfer that right. By using the word "share" the parties to a contract of sale do not necessarily mean the right of a person whose name is then actually on a register of share-holders. And a contract to deliver shares in a public company is sufficiently performed when the contracting party places the other in the position of being the legal owner of them. PARBHUDAS v. RAMLAL, 3 B H.C O.C. 69. [F., 8 B.H.C. 133.]

(10)—Sale of shares for future delivery—Suit for damages for non-acceptance—Readiness and willingness to transfer—Necessary acts.—This was a suit for damages for non-acceptance of shares, contracted to be purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff vendor had contracted to execute proper transfers, and do all other things necessary on his part to transfer the shares and to bear all the expenses of such transfer. The question was whether the plaintiff had fulfilled his part of the contract. It was found that the vendor had the necessary documents in his possession on the date fixed for the transfer, and was prepared to do all in his power to transfer the shares to the defendant. There was no condition in the contract that the vendor should get the transfer registered in the company's books. Held that where the vendor has transferred the shares to the purchaser, executed the deed of transfer, and delivered it over to the transferee, it becomes the duty of the latter to go to the office of the company and get the transfer made in his name in the absence of a specific condition to the contrary; and that in present case, the defendant could not escape liability on this ground. MAGANBHAI v. MANCHHABHAI, 3 B.H.C.O.C. 79. [F., 8 B.H.C. O.C. 133; R., 12 B. 585.]

(11)—Specific performance—Sale and purchase of shares — Future delivery — Readiness and willingness.—Plaintiffs sued defendant for specific performance of an agreement by which the latter purchased from the former certain shares in Companies A and B. The terms of the agreement were that all calls were to be duly paid by the plaintiffs to date of delivery and that delivery should be made at the defendant's option at any time within 6 months from the date of the agreement. On the last day for delivery, plaintiffs produced allotment receipt papers all bearing date prior to date of contract, for the number of shares contracted to be sold in both Companies. Regarding Company A's shares nothing beyond allotment papers indorsed by the original allottee were offered within the stipulated date. No transfer nor application for transfer paper, was offered to the defendant; nor had the plaintiffs any such signed by the original allottee in their possession. Held that the plaintiffs could not be considered to have been in the full and plenary position of being able to have constituted the defendant the owner of those shares and they must fail to this extent, upon the issue of readiness to complete their contract.

Of the B Company receipts, 9 were indorsed by the allottees, one had no indorsement, and over the allottee of it and of another receipt, plaintiffs had no power to enforce delivery. Held that, although plaintiffs had done all they were required to do, by the usage of the market, to transfer the interest in 8 of them, yet the contract being an entire one, they must fail in respect to them also. If a party bound to do an act upon request, is ready to do it when it is required, he will fully perform his part of the contract; although he might happen not to have been ready, had he been called upon at some anterior period. JIVRAJ MEGJI v. POULTON, 2 B.H.C. 253.

(12)—Sale of shares—Future delivery—Contract for payment and transfer—Readiness and willingness.—Plaintiffs entered into a contract with the defendant by which the latter purchased three shares in a Company for Rs. 33,300 to be paid on or before 1st July 1865, and on payment the plaintiffs as vendors agreed to execute proper transfers and do all such things necessary on their part to transfer the shares thereby agreed to be sold, and to bear all such expenses as may be necessary to get the said shares transferred in the name of the purchaser, in the books of the Company. On the 1st July the plaintiffs tendered to the defendant in person three share allotments and receipt papers together with each a transfer paper and application paper each signed in blank by the original allottee. The defendant received the papers and the plaintiffs demanded payment of the stipulated price which the former refused to pay. Plaintiffs were not beneficial owners of the shares, but had entered into a contract at the desire of the constituent, who had previously to their doing so, handed to them the allotment papers, which remained in their possession continuously down to the period of tender. On production of the allotment paper and of the transfer and application papers which were handed to the defendant, a transfer of the share of the allottee would, according to the usage of the Company, have been made, as a matter of course, to the defendant. In a suit by the plaintiffs to recover damages for breach of contract: Held that a covenant for transfer of shares and payment of purchase-money were concurrent and that, if the plaintiffs did all that was in their power to put the defendant in possession of the shares as legal owner, it was wholly immaterial to the defendant whether plaintiffs were legal owners or not. Held, further, that the ability of the plaintiffs to constitute the defendant as legal owner and their willingness to do so amounted to readiness and willingness on the part of the plaintiffs to do their part of the contract. Brothers, one of the substitution of—Survivorship —Custom of Muth—Suit for possession on ejectment, conversion of, into one for redemption, if and when allowable—Co-shebaits, made defendants—Refusal to join as plaintiffs—Collusion when not proved or alleged.—Where property belonging to an endowment is sought to be recovered from a third party, who asserts that he is the owner thereof, all the trustees of the endowment should be made parties to the suit, and such of them as refuse to join as plaintiffs should be made defendants. All the trustees should ordinarily be co-plaintiffs, and only such of them should be made defendants, as are unwilling to be joined as co-plaintiffs, or have done some act precluding them from being plaintiffs; because, where the administration of the trust is vested in several trustees they all form, as it were, but one collective trustee, and they must exercise the powers of their office in their joint capacity. Their interest and authority being equal and undivided, they cannot act separately, but all must join. (11 C. 338, 8 I.A. 135, 8 C. 42, R.; 26 C. 409, D.) Upon the death of one of several joint trustees, the validity of the exercise of the trust powers by the survivors depends upon the nature of such powers; if these powers are coupled with an interest, or are annexed to the office of the trustee, they will pass with the trust to the survivors and can be exercised by them. As regards the members of a Mitakshara family who are joint shebaits, the right of shebaitship passes by survivorship; and, consequently, upon the death of the original plaintiff, the right to prosecute the suit or an appeal preferred by him vests by survivorship in all his brothers, and one of them is not competent to obtain an order for substitution, as if he is alone entitled to the office of shebait. (33 C. 507, R.; 26 C. 409, D.) Although a suit, brought as one for possession, may, in the discretion of the Court, where the circumstances of the case permit, be equitably converted into one for redemption, which could only be allowed when the mortgage is a valid and binding one, a plaintiff must ordinarily succeed on the case he has made in the plaint, and, unless there are special circumstances, an action instituted for purposes absolutely inconsistent with redemption cannot properly be converted into an action to redeem, as it would in reality amount to the conversion of a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. The period of limitation for the suit was six years from the date of the death of the shebait. The right of indemnity is incident to the position of the trustee. discharged from custody; the Judge found for the defendants with costs, subject to the opinion of the High Court. Held that the words "debt levied by execution" used in the Table of Fees for the Recorder's Court, and continued in the subsequent tables being ambiguous, the principle that if an instrument be an ancient one, and its meaning doubtful, the acts of its author may be given in evidence, in aid of its construction was applicable; that as the Sheriff was the officer of the Court, and his fees were received under its authority, the case need not be referred back to the Small Cause Court in order that evidence of usage might be taken; that, having regard, as well to the usage and practice of the Supreme Court as to the liability of the Sheriff at the time the old Tables of fees were settled, the words used entitled the Sheriff to poundage, upon his executing a warrant for the arrest of a defendant in execution of a decree; and that if the Sheriff's right accrued upon his executing the warrant, the subsequent discharge by the Court, of the defendant from custody did not deprive him of it. (3)—Attachment of property—Compromise before sale—Sheriff's right to poundage.—The very principle on which the Sheriff is entitled to poundage shows that he is not entitled to more than the sum actually received. What the Crown actually obtains, though not under the direct compulsion of the process, is considered as being in fact the amount levied by the hands of the Sheriff. If, therefore, the amount received by the Crown is to be taken as the criterion for one purpose, it must be also for another. Where property is attached by the Sheriff after judgment, and the parties compromised the matter before sale, the Sheriff would be entitled to poundage only on the sum received on compromise. The defendant No. 2, who was appointed the new Shet-sanadi, was remunerated from the extra assessment levied upon the Shet-sanadi lands. In 1905, the Government resumed the lands and handed them over to defendant No. 2: Held, (1) that the order passed, and the action taken, under the rule by the Government, had in law the effect of converting the lands from a Shet-sanadi vatan into a ryotwari holding, and of investing the holder the cargo, and sold both Ship and cargo by public auction. A large part of the cargo was afterwards saved. The Court below held, that as the cargo might have been, and was, in fact, partially saved, there was no such total loss of the cargo and freight as entitled the Assured to recover on either of the Policies. Such ruling, as regarded the cargo, affirmed, but as the Ship when she was reduced to a wreck, was incapable of earning any freight, the Judicial Committee were of opinion, that there was such a total loss of the disbursements, to be paid out of the freight, as to entitle the Assurers to recover on that Policy. (5)—Navigation—Ship not carrying lights—Collision.—When one ship by her wrongful act suddenly places another ship in a position of extreme danger, the same amount of skill, as is expected under other circumstances, cannot be expected. Any Court ought to make the very greatest allowance for a captain or pilot suddenly put into such difficult circumstances, and the Court ought not, in fairness and justice to him, to require perfect nerve and presence of mind enabling him to do the best thing possible. In this case, it was held, that, even if, in the moment of emergency, the serang of the ship placed in a position of extreme danger by the gross negligence of another ship (in carrying no lights), gave an order to starboard instead of to post the helm (which resulted in collision), the former ship was not guilty of such negligence as would make her responsible for the collision (The Bywell Castle, 4 P.D. 219, The Owners of "Tasmania" v. Smith, 15 App. Cas. 223, Appl.). A and B entered into the contract as if both had been British subjects. Held that, on the evidence, the parties contracted with reference to the Merchant Shipping Act, and that the intention was that a title under that Act should be given. Held also that, although it turned out that A's nationality prevented the possibility of his being registered as owner, this did not affect the liability taken upon himself by B to have himself put on the register as owner, or his liability to put A in a position to have a change of ownership noted in the register under s. 53 of the Merchant Shipping Act. Held further that B not having had himself put on the register as owner, and not having put A in a position to have a charge of ownership noted under s. 53, and B having declined to take any further steps towards attaining either of these objects, A was entitled, although he had got possession of the ship, to rescind the contract, and to recover back a portion of the purchase money which he had paid, and also to recover damages for the breach of contract. The Calcutta Court of Small Causes had power to seize and sell a vessel in execution of a decree of that Court, and the bailiff who sells the vessel is the person who ought to execute the bill of sale to the purchaser. A British ship having, in execution of a decree of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes, been sold to a person qualified to be the owner of the British ship,—Held that it was necessary that the transfer to the purchaser should be by bill of sale as prescribed in s. 55 of the Merchant Shipping Act, and the mere sale and delivery to the purchaser did not pass a title to him. sea and back again and requires the employment of a pilot. Although the pilot has charge of the ship, the owners are most clearly responsible to third persons for the sufficiency of the ship and her equipments, the competency of the master and crew and their obedience to the orders of the pilot in everything that concerns his duty, and under ordinary circumstances, his commands are to be implicitly obeyed. To him belongs the whole conduct of the navigation of the ship to the safety of which it is important that the chief direction should be vested in one only. There may be extraordinary occasions when the master would be justified in disobeying the commands of the pilot. If, from sudden illness or intoxication, he becomes incompetent to command, the supreme authority would revert to the master during the period of the pilot's temporary incapacity. MUHAMMAD YUSUF v. PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, 6 B.H.C. O.C. 98.

(4)— Collision — Burden of justifying. — When a ship under way comes into collision with a vessel at anchor exhibiting a proper light, it is obvious that she has a heavy burden cast on her to justify her conduct. In the case of a vessel at anchor, there is an obligation to keep a competent person on watch and it is his duty, not only to see that the anchor light or lights are properly exhibited, but also to do everything in his power to avert or to minimise a collision. (The Clara, 12 Ohio, 200, R.) Being placed, entirely by the erroneous conduct of the vessel under way, in a position of difficulty in which an instant step was imperative, a competent sailor is entitled to claim a favourable consideration for the action which he decided to take, even if it should afterwards appear that such action was not the best possible. (5)—Shipping Law—Liability of ship for fault of pilot—Port rules, 1956—Act XXII of 1855.—The ship H, in charge of a pilot (acting as harbour master), when proceeding across the bow of the ship, I S, which was at anchor, to take up a clear mooring, came into collision with and slightly damaged her, and this suit was for the damage so occasioned. Both sides relied on Act XXII of 1855 and the Port Rules of 1856, the plaintiff contending that the officer in charge was not such officer of the said Act, and Rules referred to; and the defendant that he was. The suit was dismissed with costs. Held that a ship is prima facie liable for damages occasioned by a collision resulting from an error in judgment of the officer in charge of her. Held, also that a vessel is exempted from liability for the fault of a pilot in charge of her, first where a master is authorized to employ a pilot, and is exempted from responsibility if he elects to do so; and, secondly, where the employment of a pilot is compulsory, and the owners of the vessel so employing him are relieved from responsibility for his misconduct; that the legislation regarding the employment of pilots and other officers in the port of Calcutta is contained in Act XXII of 1855 and the Port Rules of 1856; that where no special requisition is made by the port authorities, under rules 2 and 7, a ship may move at her discretion in the port; and that it is unlawful, under s. 12 of Act XXII of 1855, to moor a vessel in the port without having a port officer on board to command of the ship. In the matter of the "HANOVER," Bourke, Ad. 15.

(6)—Shipments—Collision—Collision in port—Port Rules, 1856—Liability of ship for damage.—The ship T having got adrift in a dark night, in consequence of a collision, the harbour master tried to anchor her, but failing to do so, as her cable jammed, finally brought her up inside the ship A, which was moored off the Howrah side of the Hoogly, this being the only berth the ship T could then secure. The next flood swung both ships, and the T fouled the A, damaging her, and casuing her to part her cables, in consequence of which she suffered further damage from subsequent collisions. The owners of the A sued the T for the whole damage done. The defence was that the promovents, by adopting certain precautions, might have prevented the accident; that the ship T, being in charge of the port authorities, was not liable, and that no care or skill on her part could have prevented the accident. The T did not allege a liability of any of the vessels subsequently collided with. Held that the liability for damages occasioned by collision rests, prima facie, on the colliding vessel. That a ship in port is bound to be prepared for such exigencies only as might be expected to arise from the circumstances she knew to surround her, that is, a ship is protected by the port rules from liability for damage only when it is due to the acts or omissions of the officials in charge of her. Held also, that the ship is liable for all the consequences occasioned by an accident that results from any defect in her equipment, or want of care or skill of her crew, etc. In the matter of the "THALATTA" Bourke Ad. 1. Held on appeal that an accident to the gear of a ship does not of itself alone render her liable for damages for a collision of which it is a remote occasion; and that a ship at anchor in the port should keep a look-out, and be ready to take all reasonable means for her own safety in an emergency. (8)—Damage from collision of two vessels both being in fault—Suit by owner of cargo in one vessel against owner of other vessel—Admiralty iurisdiction—Extent of liability for damages and costs.—Plaintiffs who were the owners of goods shipped on board a patimar sued the owners of the defendant steamship for damages for the loss of their goods which resulted from a collision which took place at sea between the two vessels. Upon the evidence the Court found that, at the time of collision, the patimar carried no lights at all and was consequently at fault, having violated the rules she was bound to obey. It also appeared that the defendant steamship "Savitri" failed to reverse her engines and that, if she had done so when the patimar was first sighted, there would have been no collision. In the result, it was found that both the ships were at fault and were therefore to blame for the collision that occured. In a case, like the present one, of a suit by the owners of the cargo on one of the vessels against the owners of the other vessel for damages for loss sustained by the collision of the two vessels, where both are to blame, the rule to be applied has been laid down to be that the plaintiff could recover only half of the amount of damages from the defendant. The Court accordingly ordered that the plaintiffs in this case do recover from the S.S. "Savitri" half the damages sustained by them. Also, with regard to costs, the proper order in such a suit would be that each party should be made to bear their own costs. OOKERDA POONSEY v. THE S.S. "SAVITRI," 10 B. 408.

(9)—Rights and remedies which owners of cargo thrown overboard have in a proper case of jettison—Lien on cargo saved in consequence of jettison — Rule of contribution for general average—Default of master—Right of innocent owners—Right of owners of ship.—Each owner of jettisoned goods becomes a creditor of ship and cargo saved, and has a direct claim against each of the owners of ship and cargo, for a pro rata contribution towards his indemnity which he can enforce by direct action. In case of a general ship, the owner of goods, sacrificed for the common benefit, has a lien upon each parcel of goods saved, belonging to a separate consignee, for a due proportion of his individual claim. In the case of the cargo not being in his possession or subject to his control, his right of lien can only be enforced through the ship-master, whom the law of England, following the principles of the Lex Rhodia, regards as his agent for that purpose. In jettison, the rights of those entitled to contribution and the corresponding obligations of the contributors have their origin in the fact of a common danger which threatens to destroy the property of them; and these rights and obligations are mutually perfected whenever the goods of some of the shippers have been advisedly sacrificed, and the property of the others has been thereby preserved. The exceptions to the rule of contribution for general average are two in number :—(a) Where the average loss is occasioned by the unseaworthiness of a ship at the commencement of the voyage and (b) where contribution is refused to shippers of deck-cargo when jettisoned. These exceptions are, in truth, but limitations on the rule, which have been introduced from equitable considerations. Where the jettison of part of the cargo was a consequence of the ship's having grounded through the negligence of her master, the innocent owners of the jettisoned cargo were entitled to general average contribution; but the owners of the ship were not entitled unless their legal relations to the shippers have been varied by special contract. (10)—Captain if agent of mortgagee—Maritime law—Loan on bottomry bond for repairs—Compensation from shipowner by owners of cargo.—The Captain of a ship is not the agent of the mortgagee of the ship, to pledge his credit for moneys required for repairs. Where the Captain cannot raise funds on a bottomry bond for repairs, but has to sell the cargo for that purpose, the owners of the cargo have no maritime lien on the ship. Their only remedy is to obtain compensation from the owner of the ship. MUTHAYA v. MUTHAYA, 5 M. 334.

(11)—Shipping law—Authority of captain to bind owners for repairs of ship.—The authority of the captain of a ship to bind her owners for repairs, and anything incidental thereto, can only exist by reason of his being their special agent for the purpose, which he will be presumed to be only in particular cases of necessity. BAYLEY v. TARUKNAUTH PORAMANIC, Bourke, O.C. 263.

(12)—Shipping law—Lien on ship for repairs in port—Ship in dock.—A ship in the river cannot be said to be delivered over to the possession of those who execute repairs; consequently, no lien arose for repairs done. Secus —If the ship had been under repair in a dock belonging to the plaintiffs. (13)—Act I of 1859, ss. 55, 56—Owners' negligence to furnish funds for repair of disabled ship and for wages—Master's right to sue for recovery of wages and passage money.—A ship which was engaged for a voyage from Singapore to Jeddah and back, was, on the return voyage, found to seek shelter in the Bombay harbour owing to heavy weather. The owner who was in Singapore was addressed very often to furnish funds for repairs, and for the wages, of the mariners and the master of the ship being unable to raise funds, the ship was sold under ss. 55 and 56 of Act I of 1859. The master, who had been engaged in Singapore, sued for recovery from the surplus proceeds of the sale, of wages up to the time when he could return to Singapore and his passage money from Bombay to Singapore. Held that he was entitled to recover. In re "THE PERSIA" EDWARD GARDNER, 6 B.H.C.O.C. 138.

Shipping Order.

(1)—Shipping order—Construction of.—A shipping order authorising the receipt of "300 bales of cotton not exceeding 52 cubic feet measurement at the screw house" was construed to mean that the measurement by whichthe parties were to be bound was a measurement at the screw-house. Held also that, if the agent of the defendants passed the bales there, the defendants were estopped from afterwards making an inquiry into the size of the bales. SOHILIZZI AND COMPANY v. COX, STEEL AND COMPANY, 17 W. R. 545.

(2)—Ship—Shipping order—"Ready to receive cargo" construction of.—The question in the present case was what was the true mercantile construction to be put upon the words "ready to receive cargo" in a shipping order. Held :—(i) that the object of the shipper in introducing such a stipulation as that contained in this shipping order is the prompt despatch of the goods. (ii) that in order to ensure this prompt despatch, it is requisite that the ship, on the day named in the order, should be ready to receive i.e., not only to take on board, but to take in and stow away cargo, meaning thereby not only the particular quantum of cargo mentioned in the shipping order, but a full cargo from, whomsoever offered, (iii) that in order to this end, a ship arriving with a fair inward cargo must, before or by the day named in the order, have discharged some reasonable portion of her inward cargo, (iv) that the best rule for ascertaining what this reasonable portion is that a ship arriving with a fair inward cargo, before she can be properly said to be ready to receive outward cargo under such a shipping order as this, must have discharged all her inward cargo except the quantity required to stiffen her, (v) and that this rule being sufficiently clear and practical and also being one generally understood and acted on in Bombay, it is desirable to establish it as the recognized test of a ship's being ready or not ready to receive cargo, under a shipping order. Sikhism.

(1) Marriage—Custom—Jat is a Sudra—His marriage with Mahomedan woman converted to Sikhism—Sikhism a proselytising religion—Sikh tenants and customs—Conversion of a born Mahomedan to Sikhism--Status in law—Ceremonies of conversion—Marriage—Strict principles of Hindu Law inapplicable to Sikhs—Presumption of validity of marriage—Burden of proof—Form of chadar andazi—Arains when converted become Sudras—Intermarriage.—Sikhism has at all times been a proselytising religion and has sought converts not only from Hinduism but also from "outlandish" religions such as Islamism and Christianity, and such converts are recognized as Sikhs by the Sikh community. There is no a priori legal or customary bar to the conversion of a Mahomedan man or woman to the Sikh faith, and such a convert after initiation becomes a Sikh, and even a Singh, provided, in the latter event, that the initiation has been effected by the pahul system of baptism instituted by Guru Gobind Singh. In the case of the conversion of a woman to Sikhism, the simple ceremony of initiation as distinguished from the more elaborate one of pahul, is sufficient for her adoption of Sikhism, so as to give her the status of lawfully marrying a Sikh or Singh. The Sikhs have no written law, their social institutions being regulated by rules, which are rules of Hindu Law, modified by custom, and further their forms of marriage are different from those of Hindus in general. Strict principles of Hindu Law are inapplicable when the Courts have to deal with the validity of marriages among Hindu Jat Sikhs of the Punjab, as the Jat Sikhs hold liberal views upon this question and are disposed to extend recognition, as far as they possibly can, to all permanent unions between a member of their community and a woman of another caste; and marriage between a Jat Sikh male and a Brahman woman, which would undoubtedly be invalid under Hindu Law, and one between a Sik Sodhi Khatri and a woman converted from Islam to Sikhism have been held valid. (50 P.R. 1895, 73 P.R. 1897, 87 P.R. 1898, 50 P. R. 1900, 79 P.R. 1910=115 P.W.R. 1910, 65 P.R. 1911=188 P.W.R. 1911, 72 P.R. 1908=47 P.W.R. 1908, R.) Where a Hindu Jat Singh obtains divorce for a Mahomedan woman from her Mahomedan husband with the object of making her his lawful wife, and certain ceremonies of initiation into Sikhism and marriage by chadar andazi are solemnized, the woman taking a Sikh name thereafter and living and co-habiting with her new husband up to the time of his death, these facts per se raise a presumption of the validity of the marriage, and the burden of proof that the marriage which actually took place was invalid in law is undoubtedly on the party impugning the same. (13 M.I.A. 158, 29 P.R. 1883, F.) Formalities are not necessary to constitute a valid marriage between Jats, and the informal ceremony of chadar andazi is regarded a well established form of marriage. (5)—Whether actionable without proof of special damage—Damages, amount of, question of fact—Second appeal.—Where the abusive language used is such that, having regard to the respectability and position of the person abused, it is calculated to outrage his feelings or lower the estimation in which he is held by persons of his own class and so bring him into disrepute, the slander is actionable without proof of special damage. A charge of adultery against a respectable man is such a slander. The question of the amount of damages is a question of fact and it is not open to the High Court to interfere in second appeal upon a question like that. JOGESWAR SARMA v. (6)—Slander by several persons—Separate suits—Libellous words—Special damage.—Each person sued for a verbal slander is responsible for only what he himself has uttered, and the plaintiff is not entitled to bring him before the Court while he is proving his case against another defendant for that for which the first defendant is not himself responsible. But in libel, each person is liable for the entire publication, and therefore they may be properly sued together. It is doubtful whether the words "You are a drunkard, thief, cheat and the paramour of your sister-in-law, you bastard" applied to a Brahmin are libellous per se without proof of special damage. (8)—Slanderous imputation against wife—Right of husband to sue for damages—Special damage.—The distinction between slander and defamation, which prevails in English law, is one which has not been adopted by Courts in India. There is no rule of law in force in this country which prevents a husband suing in his own name for damages for a slanderous imputation against his wife's chastity or modesty without proof of actual damage; and an imputation of this kind when published with such particularity and precision, that, having regard to time and place, it may well create a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the husband that his reputation is injured, and thus inflict on him the pain consequent on such a belief, is actionable per se. (1 M. 383, D.; 8 M. 175, 12 C. 424, 140 P.R. 1882, 22 P.R. 1884, Cr., 33 P.R. 1887 Cr., R.) Where a plaint alleged that the 1st defendant made and the 2nd defendant corroborated at the making of a distinct assertion, made deliberately with intent that it should be believed, that the former was in the habit of committing adultery with plaintiff's wife, plaintiff could claim damages from the joint authors of the report even if the plaintiff was not actually put out of caste, or even compelled to put away his wife in order to escape expulsion, as an immediate consequence of the spreading of that report. The Judge found that the subject-matter of the plaint did not constitute a cause of action and therefore rejected it under s. 32, Act VIII of 1859. His finding was held to be opposed to the decisions and clearly wrong. The Court, in such a case, should decide upon the extent of injury done to the appellant. It does not follow, because a man's professional position or gains are not injured by the abuse received by him, that his feelings have not been injured and outraged, and an action

(1)—Slander of title—Cause of action—Damages—Counterfeiting trade mark—Allegation to the Collector of Customs—Detention of goods in consequence by the Collector—Action of Collector, whether a judicial proceeding—Merchandise Marks Act (IV of 1889).—There were allegations in the plaint, (a) that the defendants were interested in putting a stop to the sale of goods imported by the plaintiff, (b) that, when the same were in the Calcutta Customs House, the defendants, with intent to injure the plaintiff, had falsely alleged to the Collector of Customs that the marks on those goods were an imitation of somebody else's, (c) that the defendants had thereby induced the Collector to detain the goods in the Customs House and had also persuaded and induced the Collector to make an ex-parte order that the plaintiff's marks were a fraudulent imitation, and (d) that in consequence the plaintiff had suffered special damage. Held, that the plaint did disclose a cause of action and should not have been rejected. Maclean, C.J.—This was virtually a case of slander of title, and in order to succeed, the plaintiff had to show that the statements of the defendants were false, malicious and that he had suffered special damage. Here, though malice had not been specifically pleaded, it was undoubtedly to be implied from the allegations (a) and (b). In any case, the suit should not have been dismissed on this account, but the plaintiff ought to have been allowed to plead special damage. Sale, J.—No question arose in this case as to

If the defendant has not ceased to reside at a certain place, but retains his dwelling-house there at the time of the institution of the suit, he must be held to have been dwelling at that place, although he may have been temporarily absent from his dwelling house. To dwell in a place is to have one's permanent place of abode there. MADHO DOSS v. SITA RAM, 3 N.W.P. 121.

It is not enough to plead that he is within the territorial jurisdiction of some other Small Cause Court. The expression "within the jurisdiction of any Small Cause Court" in s. 151 (1) of the Army's Act, 1881, refers to the antecedent words 'persons' and not 'action.' R. NORTON v. MAJOR T. The defendant remained working for gain for a month, a time quite sufficient to show that he was not a mere passing traveller or a person who could be said to have had during that time a place for permanently working elsewhere. For an appreciable time, the defendant discontinued to work for gain at Calcutta and worked at Simla. ISMAIL RAU v. GRISHI CHUNDER DASS, 92 P.R. 1875.

(28)—Deed intended to be but not registered, whether created a valid mortgage—Mistake of Small Cause Court in dismissing claim as res judicata, not an overstepping of jurisdiction.—This suit was for possession of land alleged to be mortgaged to the plaintiff. The first Court dismissed the claim stating that the full consideration for the deed had not been received and that any claim for the debt actually due might be separately preferred. This judgment was supported by that of the first appellate Court which observed that the debt might be sued for. On such a suit for the debt having been subsequently brought in the Small Cause Court, that Court erroneously considered that it was prevented by the judgment of the Assistant Commissioner from trying the question of what debt was due. The Chief Court on special appeal in the case refused to interfere with the order of the Small Cause Court, for it could not be said that it was out of jurisdiction. The Small Cause Judge might have been mistaken in having rejected the plaintiff's claim, but such a mistake cannot be regarded as an overstepping of jurisdiction or an undue restriction of it. As, however, the Additional Commissioner has erred in treating the question of the non-receipt of consideration as one not for his decision whereas he could have decided it and, after all that had happened, his was the only Court that could do so, the Chief Court reversed the order of the Additional Commissioner restoring the case to the file and directing him to dispose of the matter of the money claim on the merits. It is discretionary with the Court to take action or not when the case is before it, as the Act does not compel it to set aside such an order of the Small Cause Court, even if there be ground for thinking that that Court acted without jurisdiction. The remedy for the aggrieved party in such a case is to apply quickly to the Small Cause Court to refer the question of jurisdiction to the Chief Court under s. 22, Act XI of 1865. Where an application was made eight and a half months after the date of the order of the Small Cause Court, the Chief Court declined to consider the question of jurisdiction when no sufficient ground was shown for the great delay in making the application. It is for the Judge to consider whether a bona fide question of right, which it is not within the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts to decide, is fairly raised in the suit, and when that reasonably appears, and not before, his jurisdiction in the matter ceases. So, a suit by a mortgagee to recover from the mortgagor the value of the landlord's share for six years, on the ground that the mortgagor had taken possession of the mortgaged land and had it cultivated by his own tenants and taken the landlord's share for six years, was held to be cognizable by the Small Cause Court under s. 6 of Act XI of 1865, it being a suit for damages for loss of profits owing to the defendant resuming possession of the land. (64)—House property acquired by Government under Land Acquisition Act—Suit for recovery of compensation amount—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.—Plaintiff a nephew of the deceased sued for possession of a house alleging that he was a preferential heir to the daughter of the deceased. But the house itself had been acquired by Government under the Land Acquisition Act prior to the institution of the suit. The lower appellate Court treated the suit as an inheritance suit for the cash sum representing the value of the house and as such dependent solely on the law or custom of inheritance. Held that, whatever the nature of the suit might have been prior to the acquisition of the house by the Government, the suit must now be regarded as one to enforce the liability of the defendant who had received compensation under the Act to pay the same to the plaintiff who was entitled to it, and, as such, the claim notwithstanding that the question of title might incidentally have to be enquired into, must be regarded as one for damages within the meaning of s. 6 of the Small Cause Courts Act, and the amount in the case being less than Rs. 500 in value, no second appeal lay. Though s. 28 Act XIV of 1869 (Bombay Civil Courts Act) does not, when jurisdiction is given under it, necessarily divide the Court into two separate Courts, it still creates an additional and distinct jurisdiction. Under Act IX of 1887, s. 33, the Court is to be regarded as two Courts in such cases. A cut and illegally carried away a tree standing on a piece of land belonging to B. The latter instituted a suit for recovering Rs. 5 as damages in the Court of a Second-class Subordinate Judge, who was invested with the jurisdiction of the Judge of a Court of Small Causes under s. 28 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869). The Sub-Judge rejected the claim having tried the suit as an ordinary suit according to the ordinary rules of Civil Procedure and came to a finding that the tree in question did not belong to the plaintiff. On appeal to the District Court, the District Judge awarded the claim. Thereupon the defendant made an application to the High Court under s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and urged that no appeal lay to the District Court from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, the decision having been given in a suit of a Small Cause nature. Held, that no appeal lay to the District Court, although the Subordinate Judge did not use the procedure of Act XI of 1865. Although the suit was filed in a Court having a double jurisdiction, the jurisdiction under which cognizance could be taken of the claim was one and one only. Having the Small Cause Court jurisdiction, the Subordinate Judge must be considered to have dealt with the case under that jurisdiction, even if he was not quite alive to it at the time. due by him. The zemindar, after receipt of the money from the under-tenant, recovered the rent from the tenant by suit, and there was no plea of payment raised by the latter, who subsequently recovered his dues from the under-tenant in the Revenue Court. The under-tenant then sued the zemindar and the tenant in the Munsiff's Court to recover the money paid by him under assignment from the tenant, and obtained a decree which was however reversed by the District Court, on the ground that the suit was one cognizable by the Small Cause Court. The plaintiff then resorted to the Small Cause Court. The Judge made a reference to the High Court stating his opinion that no action for money had and received lay against the zemindar, and that no action was maintainable against the tenant as it was res judicata by the Collector. Held that the opinion of the Small Cause Court Judge that the under-tenant could not recover from the zemindar was correct, but that, as the Collector had no jurisdiction to try whether the tenant owed the under-tenant (for money paid by him for his use), a sum equal to the rent due by him, when the latter had not been authorized to set it off or to deduct it from the rent, the Judge of the Small Cause Court was competent to try whether the under-tenant did pay money for the use of the tenant at his request, and, if it be found in the affirmative, to decree the suit in his (under-tenant's) favour. S. 45, cl. It is especially intended to apply to those cases in which, after the profits of a village have been calculated, and the revenue and cesses have been paid, a dispute arises as to whether the division has been rightly made, and one co-sharer claims that certain profits have not been taken into account, or that certain payments have been made out of the common fund which the lambardar or the other co-sharers ought to have paid from their private resources. Though issues of title had been raised in this case, the decree was for damages only in accordance with the plaintiff's claim, and the decree of the appellate Court had simply reversed that of the first Court and dismissed the suit. Having found that by custom the chamars in the Taraf were entitled to appropriate the dead animals irrespective of any services rendered, the Court of first instance gave a decree for the hide. On appeal by the defendants it was urged that the lower appellate Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, and that if it had, the suit itself was not maintainable. Held, that the suit was one for personal property of value less than Rs. 50 and, unless it could be shown that it was not of the nature cognisable by a Small Cause Court, the further appeal would be barred by s. 39 of the Punjab Courts Act XVII of 1877. Held also that the mere circumstance that the right of the chamars to the hides of dead animals was provided for in the Administration paper, could not constitute them village officers so that the suit should be brought before a Revenue officer as one for the perquisites of a village office, excluding thus the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court under s. 6, cl. 4 of Act XI of 1865. Holding that the plaintiff ought to have sued in the Small Cause Court, the Sudder Ameen dismissed the suit. The contention on second appeal that there was a question of right in the case which could only be established in a regular suit, was not upheld by the High Court which decided that since the bricks were personal property and in value less than Rs. 500, the suit relating thereto would properly lie only in the Small Cause Court. The plaintiffs in this case, who were co-members of a division of a caste along with the defendants, and as such tenants-in-common with them of certain cooking vessels, alleged that they were excluded by the defendants from the common possession and common use of those vessels, and sought to have the vessels given over by the defendants to a person who should hold them to the use of the plaintiffs as well as of the defendants. These decrees can be enforced only by execution, and the limitation for proceedings to execute them is prescribed by the Act itself. In the present case, however, there was the further question whether there was a new contract between the parties enabling the plaintiff to enforce his decree by suit in the Civil Court. By the terms of the contract by which the defendant agreed to pay the decree amount by instalments, it was also specified and pointed out that the remedy for the enforcement of the contract in the event of the defendant making default was the execution of the decree and not a suit in the Civil Courts. (357)—Jurisdiction of, to award compensation for erroneous attachment before judgment, s. 491—Civ. Pro. Code.—By sch. II of the Civ. Pro. Code, Ch. XXXIV of the Code, relating to arrest and attachment before judgment, is extended to the Provincial Courts of Small Causes except as regards immoveable property. This exception prohibits the Small Cause Court not only from ordering attachment of immoveable property, but also from determining the question of compensation, in case an attachment is ordered by mistake. That Court has, therefore, no power to allow compensation under s. 491 of the Code, and its order so far is ultra vires. Such a case is not one of compensation for improper attachment provided for by s. 491, but one for an attachment, which the Court had no power to order. BARU MAL v. (398)—Determination of right to receive maintenance—Jurisdiction—Small Cause Court—Maintenance for Hindu widow, principles regulating award of.—The question in this case was as regards the liability of the defendant, the brother of the deceased husband of the plaintiff, to support her. The High Court laid down the following principles to regulate the award of maintenance for a widow in the position of the plaintiff. The brother of the husband may be liable to maintain her in case of his having obtained from his father any property yielding him an income. And the amount of maintenance in such a case must be fixed with reference to the amount of such income and not solely on the necessities of the plaintiff. In case of the defendant's income from ancestral property, or in case of his personal liability, his personal property, being small, the Court will have to take into consideration the greater convenience of the defendant in maintaining the plaintiff if she should live in his house, than if she were separate. The reasons of the lower appellate Court for allowing a small amount of maintenance to the plaintiff in this case were not in accordance with the above principles and the High Court remanded the case with directions to the lower appellate Court to retry it, and fix an amount suitable to the income of the defendant BHUGWAN CHUNDER BOSE v. A Small Cause Court in the mofussil has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to recover "balute" or "aya," which is a claim in respect of a hak belonging to, and forming the emoluments of, the hereditary office of a village mahar, and is, therefore, a claim in respect of immoveable nibandha, and not moveable or personal property. In the present suit brought in a Small Cause Court, plaintiff claimed the excess rent collected by his co-proprietors, and also arrears of rent from the tenants. Held, that the suit cannot proceed in the Small Cause Court (1) on the ground of misjoinder of parties and causes of action, and (2) because it involved the taking of accounts between co-proprietors. The money due as a call is money which is, by statute, to be deemed a debt, but this is not synonymous with "money due on contract." The jurisdiction of Mofussil Small Cause Courts does not extend to debts generally (as does the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts in Presidency towns under Act IX of 1850), but to "money due on contract," and therefore 'does' not extend to money due as a call which cannot be described as money due on contract in view of the statutory description of such money in the Indian Companies Act, 1866. instituted the present suit against the Government in the Small Cause Court at Moorshidabad for recovering his salary due for a specified period. It was contended for the defendant that since, under the provisions of s. 9 of Act XI of 1865, suits against the Local Government or against the Government of India have to be brought in the Court having jurisdiction at the place which is the seat of such Government. and Moorshidabad is not the seat of Government, the Small Cause Court, at that place had no jurisdiction. Held, on a reference by the Judge of a Small Cause Court, that the suit was substantially a suit against the Government and not one against the Agent individually, and that therefore the decision of the Small Cause Judge dismissing the plaintiff's suit for want of jurisdiction was correct. In the present suit, S, the grandson of M, sued T for the property, alleging that it was ancestral property and not streedhun of M, and also pleaded collusion between T and R. Held that the suit was in effect one "for a share, or part of a share, under an intestacy" and was not, under the exception in cl. 2, s. 6, Act XI of 1865, cognizable by a Small Cause Court. But, considering the time that had elapsed, and that the parties had made no application to the High Court, the High Court refused to interfere with the decision in the former suit. (1)—Mofussil Courts of Small Causes—Act XI of 1865—New trials.—Where the Court, on the application of a plaintiff whose suit was dismissed for non-production of witnesses on the date of hearing, orders a re-trial and passes a decree in his favour on hearing evidence, it is also open to the same Court to grant a second re-trial on the application of the defendant after decree, but on grounds sufficient and distinct from those on which the first re-trial was granted. There cannot be successive re-trials, if trials are held bona fide and without gross negligence. ASSOOL SHAIKH v. HUBEEBOOLA, 13 P.R. 1868.

(2)— Small Cause Court — Cross suits—Conditional order for new trial—Whether proper. —One of two cross-suits in a Small Cause Court having been decreed and the other dismissed on the same date, the plaintiff in the latter suit applied for a new trial and the Court gave him leave to renew his suit if the order in the first case were reversed. That order having been reversed, the plaintiff sued a second time. Held that, as the order of the Judge on the application for re-trial was merely an order staying proceedings in the original suit until the happening of a certain event which had afterwards happened, it was not an order confirming the dismissal of the original suit; and that the plaintiff was entitled to have his cases tried on the merits, as on a re-trial. (15)—Alteration of Small Cause Court's judgment—New trial—Evidence — Act X of 1867, s. 1—Act XI of 1865, s. 22—New trial.—When a judgment of a Small Cause Court in the Mofussil is called in question by one of the parties on a point of law, a motion cannot be received to alter or reduce the amount of the judgment; but a new trial must be applied for within the period allowed by s. 21, Act XI of 1865. Upon granting a new trial, the Judge need not re-open the whole case, but may lay down any issue or issues of law and fact, having reference to the grounds on which the judgment is impeached. A party using the statement of another against him must put the whole statement in evidence, but the Judge is not bound to believe it all. For instance, if the Judge, on the evidence, really believes that the payment credited in a plaintiff's books were made, although he disbelieves the entry as to the amount of the debts, there is nothing inequitable in his giving the defendant the benefit of the payments. The Judge is bound to look at the whole of the entries, giving credit to such as he believes to be true, and discrediting those which he believes to be false. The hearing for a new trial is a hearing within s. 22, Act XI of 1865. An application for a new trial is a point in the proceedings previous to the hearing. effect of s. 5 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, coupled with sch. II to that Act, was to render the whole of ch. The Government in their Notification appear to have read and understood this section as authorizing them "to permanently invest" with the powers of a Subordinate Judgeand not only permanently, but unconditionally. The notification had thus the effect of permanently changing the jurisdiction and office of the Small Cause Court Judge and permanently erecting and establishing an entirely new Court. This the Government had no authority to notify, and the notification was therefore ultra vires. A plaint in an original suit was presented to an Acting Small Cause Judge, who had not been specially invested with the powers of a Subordinate Judge (like the permanent incumbent) and a decree was passed by him. Held that he had no right to receive the plaint as he was not a Subordinate Judge in the sense of s. 51 of the Act. Both the Cantonment Joint Magistrate and the Small Cause Court have concurrent jurisdiction over a pleader residing within the limits of a Cantonment and practising as a pleader within the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court. (3)—Decree of Civil Court—Suit to enforce—Jurisdiction of Court of Small Causes.—A suit cannot be maintained in a Small Cause Court upon a decree of a Civil Court. Although an action prima facie lies on the judgment of every Court of competent jurisdiction, the duty thus created is not within the terms of s. 6, Act XI of 1865. Further, the action on a judgment or decree in such cases will not give to the plaintiff a higher or better remedy than he already has. MANCHHARAM KALLIANDAS v. But, the mere fact that the patta, for the lands held by two parties distinctly, happens to stand in the name of both of them jointly, cannot render such lands joint property. So a suit by one of the joint patta holders against the other, for recovery of the amount of assessment paid on behalf of that other, is not one excluded by the above art. 41. (b) of s. 18 of Act XV of 1882 (Small Cause Courts Act) is intended to have the same meaning when read with each of the three several cases mentioned in the clause as giving the Court juriedidtion ; and as the word includes non-British subjects among the defendants subject to the jurisdiction, if they are "resident" or "personally work for gain" within the territorial limits of the Small Cause Court, it would be a strained construction to hold that it did not include them among the defendants subject to the jurisdiction under the clause, when the ground of jurisdiction is that they are "carrying on business" within those limits. It may be true that non-British subjects who do not reside in British India do not make themselves personally subject to the general Municipal law of British India. Still, by establishing their business in British India from which business they expect to derive profit, they accept the protection of the territorial authority for their business and their property resulting from it, and may be regarded by so doing as submitting to the jurisdiction of the Courts of the country. But it is competent for a defendant in a suit under that section to set up an adverse title, either legal or equitable in bar of the demand, i.e., the action. The Court of Small Causes in such a case cannot determine whether either of those titles is good, but it may, and indeed must, determine, in order to ascertain whether or not its jurisdiction to proceed with the suit is ousted, whether an actual question of title has been set up. Where, therefore, in a suit under the section, whereby the plaintiff sought to eject the defendant from a certain portion of the house occupied by him, the defendant set up the plea that the deed of sale relied on by the plaintiff and the deed of attornment passed by the defendant were all colourable, executed for placing the property beyond the reach of his creditors, held that the defendant was entitled to set up the defence, and that it ousted the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes to proceed further with the action, because such defence raised a question of adverse title. Where a contract or deed is made for an illegal or immoral purpose, a defendant, against whom it is sought to be enforced, may show the turpitude of both himself and the plaintiff, and a Court of justice will decline its aid to enforce a contract thus wrongfully entered into. It is not for his own sake, however, that the objection is ever allowed, but is founded on general principles of policy, which the defendant has the advantage of. LUCKMIDAS KHIMJI v. consigned the goods, drawing on the defendant a bill of exchange, in favour of a certain Bank, which had been duly accepted by the defendant. The bill, when presented for payment was dishonored, and the attorney of the plaintiff paid the amount to the Bank. The defendant having refused to pay the bill, the goods, after notice to the defendant, were sold at his risk and realised a certain amount. It appeared from the evidence that the defendant alleged that the goods were inferior to the sample and the plaintiff refused to hold a survey until the defendant paid the amount of acceptance. The p aintiff now sued in the Court of Small Causes for the recovery of the price of the goods, giving the defendant credit for the proceeds realised from the sale of the goods. The amount originally due on the bill was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes. Held that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction in the matter as there is no payment by the defendant or admitted set off. Code—S.*3, Act X of 1888—"For the purpose of execution," meaning of—Power of Calcutta Small Cause Court—Res judicata.—An order of the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, made in a proceeding under s.278, Civ. Pro.Code, being an order made in a suit within the meaning of s. 37, Presy. Small Cause Court Act, is final. S. 23, Act XV of 1882, has been repealed by s.12 of the Amending Act I of 1895; but s. 9 of the latter Act continues in force the whole of the present practice and law of Procedure of the Small Cause Court, until the Procedure has been superseded by a new Procedure to be introduced by the rules framed by the High Court. S. 283, Civ. Pro. Code, has been excluded from application to a claim proceeding in the Small Cause Court, by a notification issued by the Court under the powers reserved to it by s. 23 of Act XV of 1882, which notification under s. 3, Act X of 1888, is still in force. The words of s. 28, Act XV of 1882, "for the purposes of execution," must be taken to mean for all purposes of execution, inclusive of the purpose of determining objections made to attachment. Though "tiled huts" may be immoveable property, for the purposes of execution, they must be deemed to be moveable property. The Calcutta Small Cause Court has full power and authority to determine the question of title under a mortgage over attached property, and that question is res judicata as between the parties. (30)—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887, sch, II, art. 18—Loan by trustee from trust funds—Suit by other trustees to recover amount due—Suit cognizable by Small Cause Court.—Suit on the Small Cause side on a pronote executed by a trustee for money borrowed from the trust funds. The Court, however, returned the plaint under s. 57, Civ. Pro. Code, on the ground that the cognizance of the suit by a Court of Small Causes was barred by s. 18, sch. II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Held, that though the amount was a loan to one of the trustees by the remaining trustees out of the trust funds, a suit for the recovery of the debt due personally by a trustee for an amount lent to him out of trust funds was no more a suit relating to a trust within the meaning of art. 18 than a suit to recover a debt advanced out of trust funds to a stranger who was not a trustee. The suit was therefore cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. SUNDARALINGAM CHETTI v. MARIYAPPA CHETTI, 26 M. 200.

(31)—Incomplete gift of Government promissory notes—Suit by executor of donor to recover notes--Jurisdiction Small Cause Courts Act, XV of 1882, s. 18.—A, as the executor of X, sued B in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay to recover two Government promissory notes of Rs. 2,000 in value, standing in the name of X. The defence was that the notes had been given by the testator to the defendant as a reward for past services. The Small Cause Judge on the evidence adduced by the defendant, held that there had been a gift in his favour. The plaintiff thereupon contended that the defendant was entitled to no relief from the Court, because, even granting that there was a gift, the gift was an incomplete one, inasmuch as the notes had not been endorsed. The Small Cause Judge dismissed the suit, holding that he had no power to declare that the gift was incomplete and on that ground to decree the return of the notes or payment of their value, and that, so far as the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court was concerned, the defendant had a right to retain the notes. But, at the request of the plaintiff, the matter was referred for the High Court's opinion. Held, (1) that the Small Cause Court was competent to entertain the suit, on the ground that there was an incomplete gift to the defendant; and (2) that a decree might be passed in favour of the plaintiff ordering the defendant either to return the notes or pay their value. that, in case of breach by the purchaser, liquidated damages were to be paid by him at one rupee per bara. The purchaser deposited Rs. 1,000 as earnest money with the plaintiff, but made default in accepting the stone. The plaintiff brought an action to recover the sum of Rs. 1,000, being the alleged balance of liquidated damages due from the defendant to the plaintiff on account of the breach of contract by the former. The defendant pleaded to the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. Held under the circumstances of the case that the suit was rightly brought in the Small Cause Court. MEHERVANJI MANCHARJI v. (33)—Small Cause Court—Jurisdiction—Suit on balance of account—Receipt in nature of part payment.—The defendant consigned certain bags of rice and grain to Hongkong, through the plaintiffs, to be there sold by the agents of the plaintiffs, for the account of the defendant. Against this consignment, the plaintiffs advanced to the defendant a sum of Rs. 15,000. The plaintiffs gave credit to the defendant for certain sums alleged to have been received from the plaintiffs' agents at Hongkong, as proceeds of the sale of the defendants' grain, and amounting in all to the sum of Rs. 14, 115-3 3, leaving a balance due to the plaintiffs of Rs. 1,264 and odd. This balance with interest amounted to Rs. 1,355 14-5. The plaintiffs, abandoning a portion of their claim to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes, sued in the Bombay Small Cause Court to recover a sum of Rs. 1,000 from the defendant. The defendant disputed the correctness of the account sales forwarded by the agents at Hongkong, and pleaded want of jurisdiction in the Small Cause Court to try the same. Held, that both the plaintiffs and the defendant were bound by the nature of the transaction to have the proceeds of the sale applied to satisfy the advance made by the plaintiffs to the defendant, and that the receipt by the plaintiffs of the amount for which they gave credit in their particulars of demand was in the nature of a part payment, and that the suit was therefore, on a balance of account, and within the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes. The party is not bound by the Act to appear in person in the first instance. Where the personal attendance of the plaintiff in Court appears to the Judge to be necessary for the proper investigation of the case, he may require the plaintiff's attendance, unless the case is within the privilege given by s. 46 of the Act. If the plaintiff's appearance be or become unnecessary, it would be a vexatious thing to compel him to attend. The Judge is not bound to depend on the ipse dixit of the defendant as to the necessity for the plaintiff's presence. Where a Judge finds a long-established Court practice, he must take it to be the law of the Court until it is overruled by a higher tribunal, or by legislation. NENBAI v. —2—Small Cause Court, Presidency Towns Practice and Procedure—continued.

The Legislature never intended to introduce the nicetics of special pleading, which obtain in the Courts of Common Law in England, into the practice of the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta. The parties to a suit in that Court do not themselves declare and plead in technical fashion. There is no other declaration than the summons which is filled up by the officer of the Court on the oral statement of the complainant, and no plea except that which the Judge takes down from the mouth of the defendant or his pleader. (3)—New trial—Fresh evidence—Further inquiry—New trials—Additional facts stated by affidavit.—A party who applies for a rule for a new trial, and obtains it on particular materials, ought not to be allowed to go into fresh evidence with a view to strengthen his case when the rule comes on for hearing. If, on hearing both parties, the Court thinks further inquiry necessary, it can make such inquiry in such manner as seems most fit to it. When new trials are moved for on allegation of facts, it would be very convenient that a practice should be introduced of requiring the facts to be stated by affidavit, and in like manner the answer to be supported by affidavit. If, upon the findings of the Judge, no such question arises, the Small Cause Court has no authority to refer the case for the opinion of the High Court, and the High Court has no jurisdiction to deal with it. The section, moreover, imposes on the Small Cause Court the duty of drawing up the case, and though in framing it, that Court may well invite the assistance of the parties and give weight to their suggestions, yet it ought not to send up questions which involve the High Court in the dilemma of either entering upon matters of fact, or refusing to answer the questions, or drawn in such a form as to involve an assumption which the facts as found by the Judge, do not warrant. (2)—Voluntary Benefit Society — Rules of society, whether could be altered.—First plaintiff became a member of the Bombay Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund in 1875. A proviso added to the rules of the Association in 1871 provided that incumbents on the Fund residing in England shall be paid their monthly pensions at the fixed rate of two shillings to the rupee. At the end of 1877, this was amended so as to exclude from the benefit of the fixed rate the widows of members who had joined the fund after the 1st January, 1888. In July, 1895, further amendments were made abrogating the two shillings rate privilege previously secured to the members who had joined before 1st January 1888. Plaintiffs alleged that the above alterations in the rule, were ultra vires of the society and prayed for a declaration that the second plaintiff, wife of the first, would be entitled, on her becoming a widow, to receive her pension at par. Plaintiff's claim was rejected on the following grounds: —The contract with the first plaintiff was, in effect, only that his widow, if he left one, was to receive such pension as the rules prescribed, and that the rules were liable to alterations by a majority at a general meeting to which he would be subject so long as he remained a member. If the plaintiffs had referred to the rules they agreed to submit to, they would have noticed that they were liable to alteration, and it could hardly be contended that a vote passed by the members of the Fund, with a view to restore the disturbed equality of widow's pensions, was beyond the competence of the subscribers, merely because the expectations of some of the members such as those of the plaintiff in this case were considerably greater than those of others. (1)—Solicitor's lien—Lien can be exercised where a solicitor is dicharged by his client—Right of inspection of documents over which lien exists in administration suits.—The right to be exercised by a solicitor claiming a lien largely depends upon the circumstances under which he has ceased to act for his client. The test is whether or not the solicitor has discharged himself or whether he has been discharged by the client; in other words, the question is whether the solicitor has ceased to act for his client owing to any unjustifiable action of his own or whether he has so ceased owing to the action of the client. The obligation on the solicitor to give inspection of and to produce documents in his possession, over which he has a lien in an administration action, is confined to those cases where they are essential to the determination of those questions which arise in the normal administration proceedings, when the estate is being actually administered. The privilege, which a mul-raiyat possesses of transferring his tenure, must be exercised in respect of the whole tenure at the same time; in other words, if he chooses to transfer his tenure, he must alienate the whole of his rights in the village including his right of managing the village and collecting the rent as also his right to the land in his possession. Sovereign—Private and public property of sovereign—Seizure of property—Act of State—Municipal Courts—Jurisdiction.—Military stores of the Begum Sumro having been seized under the orders of the Governor-General, a suit was brought for damages for alleged wrongful seizure. The defence was that the Courts had no jurisdiction. some extent, the necessary consequence of the suzerainty vested in the predominant power. But apart from this general source, rights of very varying kinds have been acquired in connection with the several States, from other sources. Such rights differ not only in origin but in kind and in degree in the cases of different States, so that in each instance in which the nature or extent of such rights becomes the subject of consideration, enquiry has to be made into the circumstances of the particular case (24 I. A. 137=2 C. W. N. 1, R.). On a review of the relation of Kathiawar States and their people to British India, and the character of the control exercised by the British Indian Government over those States and particularly with relation to the administration of justice. Held, that the Kathiawar States are not included within the King's dominions. Large as has been the political control exercised over them, any assertion of territorial sovereignty has been avoided. No legislative power over them has ever been claimed. The intervention in their affair has never been carried farther than was judged necessary in the emergency, for the maintenance of peace, good order and security. The position of the Chiefs has always been respected; and, at least, in the case of the more important among them, many of the functions commonly regarded as attributes of sovereignty have been preserved to them. The form adopted in establishing and regulating tribunals in the province has been that which was regular and appropriate if it was not British territory, but quite irregular and inapplicable if it was. If a Court, administering justice on the King's behalf, makes an order, judicial in its nature, by which some one is injuriously affected, the person aggrieved is not precluded from applying to the King in Council to redress his wrong merely by the fact that he is not the King's subject. The jurisdiction, exercised by the courts of the Assistant Political Agents and the Political Agent in Kathiawar, and by the Governor of Bombay in Council on appeal, is political and not judicial. No appeal lies to His Majesty in Council from the courts in Kathiawar or from the decision of the Governor of Bombay in Council on appeal. HEMCHAND DEVCHAND v. A second appeal, though not expressly provided for by Act II of 1904 (which was in force at the time this appeal was preferred), lay under s. 584 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the Court of the Divisional Judge being a Court subordinate to the Calcutta High Court, since Act VII of 1905 came into operation. Under s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, a deed of gift, if registered, is valid, whether accompanied by delivery of possession or not. The fact that the Courts of the Central Provinces were erroneously of opinion that delivery of possession was necessary to give validity to the deed would not render the deed inoperative. When such a deed is executed by a Hindu female heiress, a cloud is thrown on the rights of reversioners, so as to give them a cause of action under s. 39, Specific Relief Act, to have the deed declared null and void as against them. (8)—Second appeal preferred on question of limitation not raised in Courts below.—Where an appeal was preferred on a question of limitation which was not raised in the Courts below, held that the appellant had waived his claim to raise the plea of limitation (8 B. 535, F.): Held,—also that the appellant in order that the question of limitation may be dealt with by the Appellate Court, must appeal on the whole case. MAUNG SHWE LA v. MAUNG SHWE GON, L.B.R. 1893—1900, 539. (6 C. 267, F.). [R., 2 L.B.R. 237, U.B.R. 1897—1901, Vol. II, p. 443.]

(9)—Further Appeal—Objection taken for the first time—Cause of action—Suit based on non-existent cause of action—Novation—Consent of parties.—Held that a plea that the suit is based on a non-existent cause of action should be taken at the first hearing, and that ordinarily a party, who has allowed a case to be decided in two Courts on the merits, should not be heard to raise such a plea as this on further appeal. A cause of action cannot be said to have been superseded by a new agreement, when the latter has not reached the stage of completeness and the parties have not finally consented to its terms. BHUP SINGH v. JIWAN SINGH, 2 P.L.R. 1911=9 Ind. Cas. 385=28 P.W.R. 1911.

(10)—Second regular appeal—Act IX of 1873, s. 5—Reversal "on a point material to the merits of the case," meaning of.—In this suit brought for proprietary possession of land the main pleas urged by the defendant were, among others, 1st, adoption by the deceased, and 2nd, that the deceased duly executed a will leaving his nephew heir to the suit lands. The first Court decreed for the defendant on both grounds, but the first appellate Court decreed in favour of the defendant upon the will, but considered the alleged adoption not proved. Its decree was also thus in favour of the defendant. On appeal to the Chief Court by the plaintiff, the question was put before the Full Bench whether the decision of the Commissioner passed upon regular appeal was a decision reversing that of the original Court upon a point material to "the merits of the case." Held that the words "on a point material to the merits of the case" mean a difference of opinion on broad facts alleged by one or the other party to the case, and upon the decision of which, in part or whole, the position of one party is substantiated and the other defeated. In this view, the plaintiff had no ground for an appeal, for, in point of fact, his position was not materially substantiated by the finding of the Commissioner that the defendant was not adopted. MUSSUMMAT RUKHAN DEVI v. JASWANT RAI, 88 P.R. 1875, F.B. [R., 104 P.R. 1876.]

(11)—Cases where second appeal permitted—Acquiescence, question of—Second appeal.—The question of acquiescence is not question of fact, and in a second appeal, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is not final. CASPERZ v. KADAR NATH SARBADHIKARI, 28 C. 738=5 C.W.N. 858. (21 A. 496, P.C., R.)

(12)—Second appeal—Costs.—A Second appeal lies as to costs, from an appellate decree. S. M. BHUGOPATI PAL v. MAHOMED ALI, 7 C.W.N. 647. (15 A. 333, Rel. on.)

(13)—First Court, decision of—Reversal on point material to merits—Second appeal.—As it matters materially, as regards enhancement, under which clause of the Tenancy Act a tenant is classed, a judgment of a Deputy Commissioner, reversing the decision of the Court of original jurisdiction on such question, is a reversal or modification on a point material to the merits of the case, and consequently the Additional Commissioner was bound to hear the appeal against such judgment of the Deputy Commissioner on the merits, as there is a second appeal in such a case. SANDHI v. GANGA RAM, 11 P.R. 1876.

(14)—Special appeal—Decision in regular appeal—Review of appellate judgment improperly granted—Special appeal.—In a special appeal, a decision passed in a regular appeal may be questioned on the ground that there has been a substantial error or defect in law in the procedure or investigation of the case upon the merits. [R., 22 W.R. 399.] Although an order granting review cannot be made the subject of appeal standing alone, yet the appellate Court can take notice of it in special appeal, and if the review was improperly granted, can set aside the judgment passed in furtherance of such review. and misinterpreted the documentary evidence on the record, has misunderstood the real point for decision in the case, and its finding on a question of fact is based on no evidence at all, the Court of second appeal can interfere with that finding.—The question as to the obligation of an estate to pay Nankar holders which is to be decided upon a construction of the documents before the Court, is a mixed question of law and fact. INDAR DAWAN SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, FYZABAD 13 Ind. Cas. 629.

(16)—Custom and usage, proof of—Second appeal, ground of—Finding of fact.—In a second appeal, the High Court can interfere where there is no evidence to justify the finding of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court. PEARY MOHAN MUKHERJEE v. JOTE KUMAR MUKHERJEE, 11 C.W.N. 83. [R., 2 Ind. Cas. 96.]

(17)—Powers of interference of the High Court in second appeal—Question of law—Legal evidence—Sufficient evidence for proving custom—Custom—Daughter—Custom excluding a daughter from inheritance—Wajib-ul-arz.—Where a question arises as to the existence or non-existence of a particular custom, and the lower appellate Court had acted upon illegal evidence or on evidence legally insufficient to establish the alleged custom, the question is one of law, and the High Court is entitled, on second appeal, to consider whether the finding is based upon legal and sufficient evidence, and if not, to upset the finding (30 A. 311, A. W.N. 1908, 112, 5 A.L.J. 456, 4 M.L.T. 169. F.). Among Pathans of Mauza Surseni, a daughter is by custom excluded from inheritance. An entry in a Wajib-ul-arz is very important evidence as to custom, and unless there is very strong evidence showing that it is incorrect, it should be accepted. SHAHBAZ KHAN v. RAHIMAN, 11 Ind. Cas. 536.

(18)—Where no second appeal lies—Torts—Malicious prosecution—Amount of damages—Second appeal.—The question of the amount of damages is a question of fact, and it is not open to the High Court to interfere in second appeal upon such a question. MUSSAMMAT DHUMAN v. SYED ABDULLA KHAN, 6 A.L.J. 381=31 A. 333=1 Ind. Cas. 760. (10 W.R. 164, 3 C.L.J. 340, R.).

(19)—Reference to the High Court of N.W. Provinces—Question of fact—Second appeal.—There can be no reference to the High Court of the North-West Provinces where the question involved is one of fact and not of law. There is no provision of law for a reference to the High Court of an Ajmir case which has been decided by a second Court of appeal. BADRUDDIN v. BISMILLAH, 11 Ind. Cas. 671.

(20)—Second appeal—Appeal against order—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 32—Lower Appellate Court dismissing suit against one of the defendants.—Where, in a suit by a purchaser of a piece of land from the first defendant for its recovery and for the removal of a latrine erected thereupon by the second defendant, the Municipal Chairman, the appellate Court made an order dismissing the suit against the second defendant on the ground that the claim against him was for damages and was barred under the Municipal Act, held that there was no second appeal, since there was no decree against which a second appeal could be preferred, and that the appeal could neither be entertained as an appeal against an order under s. 32, Civ. Pro. Code, since the District Judge did not hold that the second defendant had been improperly joined and direct that he should be excluded from the suit. SYED ALLI SAHEB v. CHAIRMAN OF THE SALEM MUNICIPALITY, 3 M.L.J. 223.

(21)—Second appeal—Omission to consider evidence—Misreading or misconstruing evidence—Omission to make specific mention of document—Civ. Pro. Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Conflict of decisions.—There is considerable conflict of judicial opinion on the point whether a second appeal will lie where the lower appellate Court omits to consider evidence or misreads, or misconstrues evidence. But the omission of the Court to make specific mention of a particular document and the statement in it, does not amount to a substantial error or defect in procedure within the meaning of s. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. DIBAKAR NAG v. MRITTUNJOY BHATTACHARYA, 13 Ind. Cas. 495.

(22)—Misreading of evidence—Review—No evidence.—A misreading or misconception of evidence is not a ground for interference in second appeal. ——2.—Admission or Rejection of Appeal.

(1)—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 54, 551, 543, 582, 584, 585—Second appeals not falling within s. 584—Duty of Judge to determine and reject—Rejection of second appeals—Grounds to be stated.—Per Edge, C.J.:—S. 585, Civ. Pro. Code, is a positive prohibition by the Legislature to the Courts which are bound to act under the Code against admitting, as second appeals, appeals from appellate decrees which do not come under s. 584, Civ. Pro. Code. It is the duty of the Judge to see, when a memorandum of appeal from an appellate decree is presented to him for admission, that the appellant does not, through inadvertence or otherwise, seek to obtain admission of an appeal by stating in his memorandum of appeal one of the grounds mentioned in s. 584, when such ground plainly does not arise. The Judge in such a case is entitled to dismiss the appeal summarily. He should not send up the case for a Bench under s. 551, Civ. Pro. Code, which section applies only to cases in which the memorandum of appeal has been admitted and the appeal has been registered.

——2.—Admission or Rejection of Appeal —concluded.

Per Aikman, J:—A memorandum of appeal may be rejected under s. 543, Civ. Pro. Code, if it is not drawn up in the manner prescribed by law, and it may also be rejected on any of the grounds set forth in s. 54, read with s. 582, Civ. Pro. Code. But whether rejected under s. 543, or under s. 54, the reasons for the rejection ought to be recorded. If the grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal were such as could not by any chance come within any of the clauses of s. 584, it would be the duty of the Court to reject it, because in such cases it would appear from the statement in the memorandum that the appeal would be barred by the prohibition in s. 585. It has been the practice of the High Court of Allahabad to allow questions regarding the construction of documents to be raised in second appeals, though it is difficult to say under which clause of s. 584, such questions would fall. Unless it appears from the statement in the memorandum of appeal, taken by itself that a second appeal does not lie, it is doubtful whether a second appeal can be summarily rejected under cl. (a) of s. 54 read with s 582, Civ. Pro. Code. When it is necessary to refer to the judgment appealed against to see whether a second appeal will lie, it would be better in such a case to fix a date under s. 551, Civ. Pro. Code, for hearing the appellant or his pleader before throwing out the appeal. RUDR PRASAD v. BAIJNATH, 15 A. 367=A.W.N. 1893, 115. [R., 30 A. 290=A.W. N. 1908, 109=5 A.L.J. 584.]

(2)—Suit to recover lands—Title by purchase —Oral evidence whether sufficient when uncorroborated by documentary evidence.—Plaintiffs sued for the recovery of certain lands on an alleged title by purchase. The first appellate Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the kobala relied on by them was not proved, and that, without any documentary evidence to corroborate the oral testimony of the plaintiffs' witnesses, the lower appellate Court could not be satisfied of the justice of their claim. The High Court refused to interfere with the finding of the lower appellate Court which was one of fact upon a legal ground. The lower appellate Court had rightly held that the depositions of the plaintiffs' witnesses as to their possession uncorroborated as they were by any documentary evidence of title generally available to parties really having possessory interest in the land, could not have the effect of establishing the truth of the statements of the plaintiffs. (7)—Ex parte decree under Act X of 1859—Order rejecting application to set aside—Special appeal—Dismissal of such application for default—Second application not entertainable.—The effect of s. 13, Act VI of 1862 of the Bengal Council, is to place decrees of the Collector's Courts passed ex parte on the same footing as decrees of the Civil Courts passed under the same circumstances; for, the section allows an appeal to the Court to which appeals against the decision of the Court passing the order would lie, in the same way as is allowed by s. 119 of Act VIII of 1859, and that brings the matter under the general provisions of appeals and of special appeals to the High Court; and, consequently, a special appeal will lie in such a case. There is no provision in the procedure laid down under Act X of 1859 for the entertainment of a second application praying that an ex parte decree be set aside when a previous application for the

Code, Act* VIII of 1859, ss. 346, 347—Dismissal of appeal for non-appearance—Order refusing re-admission of appeal under s. 347—Special appeal from order.—A special appeal is admissible from an order of a lower appellate Court rejecting an application, under s. 347 of Act VIII of 1859, for the re-admission of an appeal dismissed for non-appearance of the party or pleader, if such appeal raises pleas which justify the High Court in interfering with a discretionary order. The lower appellate Court having dismissed an appeal under s. 346 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the appellant applied for its re-admission on the ground that though he was present in the Court he had not heard the call when the appeal was taken up and that his pleader who had been engaged in another Court at the time of the call had put in an appearance within five minutes. The appellate Court summarily rejected the application. The High Court, in remanding the application for proper inquiry and consideration, held that the grounds on which the application was made certainly deserved to be inquired into and considered by the lower appellate Court. Such a fine could only have been inflicted under the provisions of s. 28 of Act XIX of 1853, and the provisions of that section having been repealed, as to proceedings under Act VIII of 1859, by Act X of 1861, the Judge has no longer power to inflict a fine in such a case. (29)—Act X of 1859—Act XXII of 1872—Act legalizing suits entertained without jurisdiction passed subsequent to decision—Whether special appeal lies in such a case.—A suit under Act X of 1859 instituted in a Court not competent to receive the plaint, had been dismissed by the lower appellate Court. Act XXII of 1872 which was passed subsequently declared that certain officers who had erroneously exercised a jurisdiction they did not possess, should not, therefore, be deemed not to have had jurisdiction. The plaintiff who preferred a special appeal after the passing of the Act, contended that the decision of the Court of first instance was no longer illegal and without jurisdiction, and that the lower appellate Court should decide the suit on its merits. Held (per Turner, J.) that the special appellant should have instituted a fresh suit, as a new law passed since the decision of a suit cannot make that decision wrong, which was, and still is, in reference to the law then in force right, and that although a Court may decide after further consideration, that a previous interpretation of the law which had been acted on in a former case was erroneous, this alteration is no ground for reviewing cases already decided; and that, consequently, the special appeal should be dismissed. Held (per Spankie, J.) that the special appeal should be allowed, the decision appealed against being contrary to the law in force at the time the special appeal was instituted, which law the Court was bound to enforce. The only remedy which is open to the auction purchaser (the special appellant in the case), is to apply for a review of judgment of the Zillah Judge. RAGHOO NATH SINGH v. TOODAY SINGH, 5 N.W.P. 19.

(31)—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 257—Irregularity in conducting sale—Sale confirmed by lower Court and first appellate Court—No special appeal.—Where a defendant complains, under s. 257, Civ.Pro. The appellant in this case, relying on the Full Bench ruling in 6 W.R. Mis. 77, contended that the High Court can interfere under s. 35 of Act XXIII of 1861 whenever a subordinate Court exercises a jurisdiction which it had not or goes beyond its jurisdiction. But the High Court held that the case did not fall within the view of the above Full Bench ruling, inasmuch as in this case the Judge certainly had jurisdiction which he had lawfully exercised and never exceeded. He might have taken a wrong view of the case, but he cannot therefore be taken to have gone beyond the jurisdiction vested in him by law. ABDOOL KUREEM v. OOGHUN LAL, 6 W.R. The appeal should not be dealt with as if it were one under s. 257 of Act VIII of 1859, and so, no further appeal lay to the High Court. SONAMONEE DOSSIA v. MOTEE SINGH, 14 W.R. 385.

——4.—Errors of Law or Procedure—contd.

(2)—Civ.Pro. Code, s. 584—Second appeal—Grounds impugning findings of fact.—Held by the Full Bench (Petheram, C.J., dissenting).—It is competent for the High Court to entertain pleas in second appeal which impeach the findings of fact recorded by the lower appellate Court, on the ground that such findings are conjectural, that they ignore the evidence, and that the Court has given no reasons for the conclusions at which it arrived. Where a lower appellate Court has drawn strained or unreasonable conclusions from the evidence, or has discredited or disbelieved witnesses or documentary proof upon capricious or unsustainable grounds, or has perversely interpreted or shut its eyes to proved facts, or has stated no intelligible reasons for arriving at its findings of facts, the High Court may take notice of all such matters in second appeal. (9 C. 309, 10 C. 932 and 11 C.L. R. 104, R.). Per Petheram, C.J.—The High Court is not at liberty, in second appeal, to look into the evidence in the cause, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the lower Courts have found the facts correctly, for, no question of fact is included among the grounds of appeal allowed under s. 584. And it would seem to be the intention of the Legislature that in small causes the findings of the lower Courts on questions of fact should be absolutely final. The expression "specified law" in s. 584 (a) means the statute law, and the expression, "usage having the force of law" in the same clause means the common or customary law of the country or community. Clause (a) is confined to cases in which the lower appellate Courts have either misconstrued a statute or a written document, or have come to a wrong conclusion as to what is the customary law of the country or community with reference to questions at issue between the parties. Clause (b) can only refer to mistakes in law. Probably it was intended to meet cases in which the lower Courts had treated the question as one of fact, when it was really one of law; it does not extend the operation of cl. (a), and is included in it. "Procedure" in cl. (c) means the process followed by Courts in the trial of cases which come before them. It cannot be held to include the mental process by which a Judge or Jury come to a conclusion on a question of fact. Per Mahmood, J.—S. 574 of the Civ. Pro. Code, was intended to guard against such failure of justice as might arise from the defective or arbitrary exercise of the extensive powers possessed by the Court of first appeal in cases which, with reference to their nature, would be proper subjects of second appeal; and a judgment of the first appellate Court which falls short of the due compliance with the various clauses of s. 574, is essentially defective, and such defect could properly be made the subject of complaint in second appeal within the purview of s. 584. (2 A.W.N. 104 and 158, R.). The word "procedure" in s. 584 (c) must be understood in its most general sense, as including all the rules contained in the Civ. Pro. Code, or any other law regulating the investigation of cases by the Civil Courts. When the Court of first appeal, after having entered into the merits of the case, has considered the evidence and adjudicated upon the merits in the manner required by s. 574, the mere circumstance that the conclusions at which the Court has arrived are erroneous, or opposed to the weight of evidence, will not justify interference in second appeal, even though such conclusions proceed upon an improper conception of the exact effect and bearing of the case upon the merits. On the other hand, where the Court of first appeal, while adjudicating with due compliance with the provisions of s. 574, arrives at conclusions upon the merits ignoring any steps essential for justifying those conclusions, or where such conclusions are based upon evidence inadmissible by law, or proceed upon an erroneous view of the legal effect of any material part of the evidence, or are arrived at under a misconception either of the rules of evidence or of any other law, such conclusions, though they purport to be distinct findings of fact, would lay the judgment of the lower appellate Court open to second appeal under cl. (c) of s. 584, so long as the error is substantial enough to have possibly affected the justice of the case upon the merits. NIVATH SINGH v. BHIKKI SINGH, 7 A. 649, F.B. = A. W.N. 1885, 151. [Overruled, 18 C. 23, P.C. = 17 I.A. 122; 20 C. 93, P.C.; Diss., 10 A.W.N. 196; R., 7 A. 765, F.B., 6 A.W.N. 166.]

(3)—Costs—Ground for special appeal.—It is very far a matter of discretion how costs are to be awarded; and the question as to how costs have been awarded is not, as a matter of right, a point for special appeal. BEER PERSHAD v. DOORGA PERSHAD, W.R. 1864, 215.

(4)—Appeal from portion of decree relating to costs.—Held, in conformity with a Full Bench ruling of the late Sudder Court, that a special appeal lies from the order of the lower Courts in matters relating to costs, and that there is nothing in the law limiting or taking away the right to appeal specially from that part of a decree which relates to costs in any case where any legal ground for special appeal is shown to exist. ASSA RAM v. KASHMEEREE DASS, Agra, F.B. 90 = Ed. 1874, 68.

(5)—Costs—Improper exercise of discretion—Appeal—Special appeal.—If a Court should award costs to the losing party it might be an improper exercise of discretion against which a regular appeal would lie; but it would not be a matter of special appeal, unless it should be held contrary to law to award costs under any circumstances to the losing party. If costs should be allowed contrary to law, it would be a subject of special appeal. HAFIZULLA v. JAMSHEDJI, 4 B.H.C. A.C. 41. [F., 8 B.H.C. A.C. 100, 1 C. 385 = 25 W.R. 266.]

(6)—Appellate Court—Discretionary power under s. 7 of Act IX of 1873—Objection to wrong exercise of discretion, urged in special appeal.—The power given to the Court in s. 7 of Act IX of 1873 of confirming a decision upon the perusal of the judgment appealed against, and the memorandum of appeal, and hearing the appellant, is a very large one, and one which should be sparingly and cautiously exercised in cases where interests in land are concerned. In cases where the facts are few and simple, as for instance, in cases of the nature of those cognizable in Courts of Small Causes, the power might be more freely exercised. But the exercise of the discretion otherwise than in accordance with the views above expressed, is not an error which the Chief Court can correct in special appeal. AHMED KHAN v. BEHRAM, 91 P.R. 1877.

(7)—Costs—Pleaders' fees — Regular and special appeals.—A special appeal is not admissible on a matter of costs unless the order of the lower Court be contrary to the provisions laid down in some Act or Regulation ; nor is a regular appeal permissible when there has been a bona fide exercise of discretion by the lower Court. DESAJI LAKHMAJI v. BHAVANIDAS NAROTAMDAS, 8 B.H.C. A.C. 100. [R., 1 C. 385=25 W.R. 226, 3 B. 202, 16 B. 241.]

(8)—Hearing of appeal before date fixed—Pleaders present at hearing.—The deciding of an appeal posted for hearing to the 14th December, on the 12th when the pleaders were present, is no such defect in procedure as to render it necessary for the High Court to interfere in special appeal. MUSSUMAT HUKEEMUNISSA v. MUSSUMAT BIBEE MUCKDOONUM, 1 W.R. 246.

(9)—Special or second appeal—Other errors of law or procedure—Erroneous order as to costs.—The Court below gave the plaintiff a decree in a suit for mesne profits for such an amount as should be ascertained to be due, and ordered that the plaintiff should have his costs on the amount claimed. Held that this constituted no ground of special appeal, but that the remedy of the defendant was by application to the Court below to amend the order. BHUGGOBAN CHUNDER GHOSE v. SHUMBHOO CHUNDER GHOSE, Marsh, 503.

(10)—Suit for damages—Nominal damages awarded—Costs.—In a suit for damages, the lower appellate Court, holding that it was a case for nominal damages, gave the plaintiff a decree for 4 annas, but declared him liable for the defendant's costs in the appellate and the first Court, which amounted to Rs. 21, on the ground that the suit, though not contrary to law, was clearly a vexatious one, inasmuch as the plaintiff had already prosecuted the defendant criminally, and caused him to be fined. Held that when costs were awarded upon such an erroneous principle, interference in special appeal was rendered necessary. MAHENDRO NATH MOJOOMDAR v. FUTTICK PAROOE, 24 W.R. 319.

(11)—Question of costs—Special appeal—Illegal exercise of jurisdiction.—This special appeal came before the High Court on a question of costs alone and the High Court said that, as a general rule, such an appeal would not lie on a question relating to costs alone, especially when, as in this case, the special appellant has not shown that the Court had exercised its discretion illegally or contrary to any rule having the force of law. ACHUMBIT SINGH v. KUNHYA LAL MOHAJUN, 7 W.R. 208.

(12)—Jurisdiction—Civil and Revenue Courts—Special appeal—Objection as to jurisdiction—Costs.—Plaintiff brought a suit in the Civil Court in respect of a matter over which the Revenue Court had exclusive jurisdiction. The suit was heard and determined by the Court of first instance and its decree was affirmed in appeal to the District Judge. Held that it was open to the original plaintiff, in special appeal to take the objection that the Courts below had proceeded without jurisdiction, although it was the plaintiff himself that selected his forum. [R., 23 B. 22]. In the above-mentioned case, the appellant although he succeeded, was ordered to pay all the costs of the suit to the respondent, because it was the appellant himself that originally selected the wrong Court. (13)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 73—Intervenor made a party to suit—Objection in special appeal.—Under s. 73, Act VIII of 1859, in a suit for rent, an intervenor should not be made a party to the suit, unless he is entitled to or claims to be entitled to any share or interest in the amount of rent sued for. But if he is made a party without any objection on the part of the plaintiff in the Court of first instance, it is too late to take that objection in special appeal. LUCHMEE DHUR PATTUCK v. RUGHOOBUR SINGH, 24 W.R. 286.

(14)—Delay in taking steps to summon witnesses—Refusal to issue summonses—Substantial error in procedure—Special appeal.—Where the Courts below refused to issue fresh summonses to the plaintiff's witnesses as he had delayed asking the Court to issue its process within a reasonable time, held that he was not entitled to come up in special appeal and ask the High Court to compel the lower Courts to condone his carelessness and indifference to his own interests. Pro. Code of 1859, had not been properly exercised and that the disavowal of the creditor's costs by the lower Court without assigning any reason was contrary to the usual practice. NOWAB JAFREE BEGUM v. AHMED HOSSEIN KHAN, 1 Agra 270.

(17)—Suit for enhancement—Plaintiff's own witnesses giving adverse evidence—Refusal by lower Court to permit amendment of plaint—Discretion of lower Court.—In this suit for enhanced rent, the defendants did not appear, but the plaintiffs' witnesses having themselves deposed to the village being a ghatwallee one, the lower Courts held that the plaintiffs' suit must fail, they having claimed to enhance the rent on the village as consisting wholly of mal lands, and an application to amend the plaint was refused. Held that the lower Courts were right. The plaintiffs sued for enhanced rent on all the assessable lands of the village calling them mal lands; and, on the face of the evidence given by their own witnesses, the case could not have proceeded in the form in which it was made and the matter of allowing amendment of the plaint being within the discretion of the lower Court, its refusal to permit the amendment could not, by itself, form a ground for special appeal. MESSRS. R. WATSON & CO. v. NIDHOO DIGWAR, 10 W.R. 87.

(18)—Suit based on ownership—Qualified admission of plaintiff's possession—Duty of Court to try question of possession.—This suit was instituted by the plaintiff as owner of certain property. The defendants admitted in their written statement that the plaintiff was in possession of the disputed share till the year 1268, though they qualified that admission by stating that this possession was held in the capacity of Zur-i-peshgeedar or mortgagee. The High Court held that the lower appellate Court was wrong in not having tried the question of possession of the property. If, on enquiry, it be found that the plaintiff was in possession as an owner and not as a Zur-i-peshgeedar, the bare fact of such possession having extended over a period sufficient to bar any claim on behalf of the defendants for recovery would be sufficient to give the plaintiff a title to be maintained in possession of the disputed property. The High Court therefore remanded the case to the lower appellate Court to try the question of possession, and then to give to it such legal effect as might be (20)—Special or second appeal—Other errors of law or procedure.—The Judge decided that the plaintiff was barred by limitation, but his judgment did not disclose the grounds on which he held that plaintiff was not entitled to deduct, in calculating the twelve years' limitation, the time occupied by certain suits brought for the same property, in which he was non-suited. Held that it was no ground of special appeal that the judgment was silent on the subject of the claim to deduction, and that, whether the point was urged in the lower Court or not, the plaintiff had no ground of special appeal in respect of omission of all notice of it in the judgment. RAMSOONDER DOSS v. MAHOMED ABBED, 1 Ind. Jur. O.S. 102.

(21)—Appellate Court—Omission to give reasons for decision—Error of procedure.—The omission of an appellate Court to give reasons for its decision is not a ground for ordering a re-trial or re-hearing of the case, provided there has not been any substantial error in its decision upon the merits. Where, however, the High Court finds it necessary that the lower appellate Court should state its reasons for the decision, the proper course would be, not to reverse the decree, but to retain the case in special appeal and require the Judge of the lower appellate Court to state fully his reasons for the decision. It was found that the defendant was not a minor, but that he was of full age and had defended the suit in person, and had in person applied to the Court below for review of judgment. The lower appellate Court dismissed the appeal, refusing to pass an order allowing this appeal by the father to stand as an appeal by the defendant. Held, that the lower appellate Court, if it had thought fit, might have allowed the appeal to stand as an appeal by the defendant, but the High Court could not interfere with the order in special appeal. If the case went back under s. 351, merely for the purpose of trying a particular issue laid down by the Judge, it may be that the first Court would be under the necessity of confining itself to the trial of that particular issue, and thus the finding of the appellate Court on other parts of the case in the suit would be final; and as it is possible that the error on the Judge's part may have caused error in the decision of the case on the merits, his decision should be reversed, and the Judge should be directed to make the remand under s. 354, Civ. If, instead of doing so, the appellate Court remands the case, under s. 352 of Act VIII of 1859, for trial on the merits, there would be no irregularity affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court which would justify the interference of the High Court on special appeal. The District Judge, on appeal, remanded the case for taking the evidence of those witnesses. The Deputy Collector, on the remand, took the evidence of the witnesses, retried the case, and again dismissed the plaint. Held, that the lower appellate Court was competent to remand the case, but was in error in that, whilst remanding the case, the Court did not direct the lower Court to take the evidence, and to return the case to it with the evidence and his finding thereon, without pronouncing a decision of his own. The High Court declined to interfere being of opinion that, in the face of the strong reasons given by the lower appellate Court for holding the hibba to be collusive, it would be in the highest decree improper to decree that the hibba was genuine merely because the auction-purchaser did not choose to appear to give evidence. As he lost the suit in both the Courts, he appealed to the High Court on the ground that the first Court had no power to make him a plaintiff under s. 73 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Held, that the objection could not be taken in special appeal inasmuch as he was an assenting party to the course taken by the first Court, and never questioned the propriety of what had been done when he appealed to the lower appellate Court. Even if a witness has not been named in the list of witnesses of a party, that will be no good ground for refusing to examine such witness when produced. It is quite in the discretion of a Court of first instance, after a plaintiff's case is closed, to allow him to call further witnesses; and there is no right of special appeal upon that point. (65)—Civ. Pro. Code, Act VIII of 1859, ss. 342, 372—Final orders passed in regular appeal whether open to revision in special appeal—Appellant residing out of British India—Order for security for costs of appeal—Powers of High Court in special appeal.—The term "decision" in s. 372 of the Civ. Pro. Code, is larger than the term "decree," and the expression "decision passed in regular appeal" may embrace orders rejecting or dismissing an appeal, although such orders are passed before an appeal is heard on the merits, and may not necessitate the preparation of a decree. When the decision passed in regular appeal turns on a mere question of fact and if that question of fact is determined after due investigation, there is no ground of special appeal. In like manner, when the Code gives to a Court of regular appeal, a discretionary power, and that discretionary power has been fairly exercised, it is no good ground of special appeal that a wiser exercise of the discretion would have led to a different result. Under s. 342, Civ. Pro. Code, it is in the discretion of an appellate Court in any case to demand security for costs from the appellant, and it is compulsory on the Court to demand security of the appellant if he is residing out of British Territories in India, and is not possessed of any land or other immoveable property within those territories independent of the property to which the appeal relates. If, then, in any case, the appellate Court, after duly considering the facts of the case and the circumstances of the parties, comes to the conclusion that security should be taken for the costs of the appeal, and on the failure of the appellant to furnish such security, rejects the appeal, the High Court ought not to interfere in special appeal merely on the ground that, in the exercise of the discretion given to the lower appellate Court, another Court might have thought it unnecessary to call upon the appellant to furnish security. Again in a case in which an appellate Court finds that the appellant resides out of British territories in India, and has no land or other immoveable property within such territories, unless it can be shown that the investigation of either of the issues of fact touching the appellant's residence and property has been defective, or that there has been error in law, the High Court has no power to interfere in special appeal. (69)—Alienation by heiress in possession—Suit by reversioner framed wrongly as for immediate possession— Competency of Court to grant relief by way of declaration.—In this case, plaintiff as mother and guardian of her minor son, impugned certain alienations by her mother, the minor son being the reversioner or the next heir after the mother of the plaintiff. But the plaint was framed as for possession of property wasted and sold by the plaintiff's mother, and for the removal of property from her hands, subject to the payment of profits to her. The lower Courts gave the plaintiff a decree declaring most of the alienations to be good only for the lifetime of the mother, and thus gave only such relief as the plaintiff was, by law, entitled to. In special appeal, it was contended that the suit was altogether wrongly framed and was therefore liable to dismissal. The High Court, however, was of opinion that the suit should not be dismissed at the stage of special appeal merely because of its having been wrongly framed. The Court which tried the case, perceiving the defect in the plaint, declared the relief to which the plaintiff was entitled. The decree, it was true, was not made in accordance with the prayer of the plaint, but was yet strictly such as the plaintiff was legally entitled to and such as she ought to have asked for. Nor was the course thus adopted by the first Court made a ground of appeal to the first appellate Court. There having been no substantial error or defect in law, in the procedure or investigation of the case, which had produced any error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits, the High Court dismissed the special appeal. ——5.—Grounds of Appeal.

(1)—Grounds of special appeal—Vagueness.—The grounds of special appeal should not resolve themselves into vague grounds which convey no information to the respondent as to what the point of law is that he has to meet. The grounds should be specific, and should indicate clearly the error of law assigned, or the substantial error or defect in law in the procedure or investigation which is imputed; and in the latter case, it should be made to appear on the face of the grounds of appeal that such error or defect probably produced error or defect in law in the decision on the merits, by stating what bearing the supposed error or defect had on the merits of the case. Mere criticisms of the reasoning employed by Courts below are not grounds of special appeal. NAND KISHOR DAS MOHANT v. RAM KALP ROY, 6 B.L.R. App. 49=15 W. R. 8.

(5)—Suit for damages for false charge and arrest—Different views of lower Courts regarding evidence, not a ground for special appeal—Question as to amount of damages awardable, a question of fact.—Plaintiff sued for damages on the ground that the defendant had brought a false criminal charge of breach of trust against him and caused him to be arrested and had thereby injured his reputation. The first Court held that a reasonable and probable cause for the charge was established by the evidence. The lower appellate Court, however, took a different view of the evidence and concluded that the defendant had failed to show that he had reasonable and probable cause for charging the plaintiff criminally with breach of trust. Held that this difference between the lower Courts in their view taken of the evidence cannot constitute a subject for special appeal. Also, the amount of damages to be awarded was a question of fact for decision by the lower Court, and that Court having fixed such sum as it had considered to be a sufficient compensation to the plaintiff, it was not competent to the High Court on special appeal to interfere with that order. (29)—Appeal—Finding of fact—Special appeal—Interference by High Court—Evidence—Credibility of witness—Weavers and cultivators—Award—Possession—Onus of proof.—The High Court, in special appeal, may disturb a finding of fact by a lower appellate Court, if the reasonings and the views on which that finding is based are erroneous in law. It is an error in law to reject the evidence of weavers, simply because they are weavers, or to accept the testimony of witnesses who are cultivators, from the mere circumstance that they are cultivators. In a suit for possession, where the defendant sets up an award under s. 15, Act XIV of 1859, in his favour, the onus of proving possession and dispossession alleged in the plaint lies, in the first instance, on the plaintiff before the defendant could be called upon to prove his case. (62)—Procedure—Error in procedure due to mistake in finding of fact—Good ground for second appeal.—An error in procedure in the lower appellate Court, in consequence of a mistake committed by it on a question of fact, will be a good ground for a second appeal. (17 C. 875, P. C., R.) In the present case, the District Judge, under a mistake, thought that a bond which was really dated 19th November, 1885, was dated 8th November, 1886; and in consequence of this, treated the rest of the defendant's deposition in which he stated that the bond had been passed by him a fortnight before he signed in the plaintiff's account book, the acknowledgment sued on dated the 10th November, 1885, as "false." Held that the District Judge must have been biassed by the opinion so formed as to the defendant's untruthfulness in dealing with the rest of the defendant's evidence, and that there had been such a substantial error in procedure as to preclude the High Court from accepting the District Judge's finding as conclusive in second appeal. (63)—Decision of lower Court on mixed question of law and fact when may be interfered with by High Court on second appeal—Suit in ejectment—Evidence of acts of user—Finding that title was not inferrible from such acts, a mixed finding of law and fact not questionable on second appeal.—This was a second appeal from the lower appellate Court's decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit in ejectment. The finding of that Court was that the plaintiff had not established title to the land in suit. The proof of ownership put forward on behalf of the plaintiff was altogether oral and consisted of acts of user over the land on the part of licensees of the plaintiff or his predecessors in title. The lower appellate Court found against the plaintiff, feeling unable to draw, from such acts of user, the inference that the land in dispute belonged to the plaintiff. Such finding was held by the High Court to be a mixed one of law and fact with which it could not interfere on second appeal. Where from facts found by the lower appellate Court, it is easy to rule with certainty that a certain legal inference ought or ought not to be drawn, the High Court, in second

(71)—Suit for declaration of right of user of tank—Evidence required.—This was a suit to declare plaintiff's right of user over the water of defendant's tank for the purposes of irrigation, which rignt the defendant denied. The lower appellate Court found it satisfactorily proved by the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses that his lands had been for a number of years irrigated by the water of the disputed tank, and gave plaintiff a decree accordingly, reversing the decision of the first Court. The special appeal preferred to the High Court was rejected on the ground that the finding of the lower appellate Court as to the degree of credibility attached to the evidence as sufficiently proving a continuous and uninterrupted user on the part of the plaintiff, was not such as could be interfered with in special appeal. It appeared, however, that the Kobala under which the plaintiff claimed was made just before the decree in question was passed. A decree in favour of the plaintiff was passed by the first Court, and this decree was reversed on appeal, the appellate Court holding that there was much suspicion of possible mala fides in the purchase. Held, that it was not enough that there was possible mala fides. There must be proof that the transaction was not what it appeared to be and that instead of being a purchase by the wife, it was a purchase by the husband in the wife's name; in the absence of such evidence, the plaintiff was bound to succeed. Where, in deciding an appeal, the first appellate Court placed reliance on a comparison of the signatures in a mortgage-deed, and the signature in a vakalut-nama, and the High Court found in special appeal that there were considerable discrepancies between the two signatures, the High Court came to the conclusion that the comparison of the signatures must have been conducted in some way which led the first appellate Court into error, and remanded the case for re-trial, though the question was a matter of fact. The Court of first instance disbelieved this evidence and gave a decree for the plaintiff. The Judge on appeal compared the signature of the plaintiff on the receipts with his signature to a document not in evidence in the case, and reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. Held, that the decision of the Judge, proceeding upon the point as to the credibility and weight of evidence, could not be objected to on special appeal. (86)—*Special or second appeal—Grounds of appeal—Receipts for rent—Civ. Pro. The Collector distrusted the receipts, and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, saying that as to three of the receipts evidence had been given which he did not believe; and that with respect to the other receipts no evidence had been offered. The Judge, on appeal, reversed the decree, and gave a decree in favour of the defendant, expressing an opinion that the distrust of the evidence in support of the three receipts was without sufficient reason. Held that, with respect to the receipts in support of which no evidence had been offered, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the rents to which they applied, and that the finding of the Judge that such rents had been paid without any evidence having then been given of such payments was an "error in the investigation of the case" which had produced error in the decision of the case upon the merits, within s. 372 of Act VIII of

The defendant D.D. widow of the eldest son of P.R. relied on a deed of gift by P.R. to his wife who on her death bequeathed it to her by will. The Court of first instance found both the hibanamah and the will genuine and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Principal Sudder Ameen, however, only pronounced on the hiba which he considered proved, and, holding that opinion upon the will as it concerned two of the co-defendants only. It was urged on special appeal that the Principal Sudder Ameen should have found as to the genuineness of the will as well, but the High Court held that there having been no dispute as to the genuineness of the will on the part of the plaintiff, the Principal Sudder Ameen had rightly ruled that he could not raise nor try that issue which was between two co-defendants in the suit, the special appellant not having any interest. Further, the Principal Sudder Ameen's decision was in the result a finding of fact upon evidence with which no interference was possible in special appeal. BHUGWAN CHUNDER BANERJEE v. (90)—Special appeal — Misconstruction of documents—Proof.—Misconstruction of a document as a ground of special appeal must be clearly shown. Where a lower Court for instance, records in its judgment north instead of south, or a tree instead of a nullah as a boundary in recording the words of a document on which it relies to prove what are the boundaries, such errors would undoubtedly be a "misconstruction," and afford good ground for special appeal. But where the objection is a mere matter of opinion, where the lower appellate Court has, for reasons given, placed a particular boundary mark in a particular part of a disputed piece of land, unless it can be shown that its conclusion is incompatible with the wording of the document it professes to go upon, such decision would not be a misconstruction; it might be a wrong decision on the facts, but there would be no such misreading of a document as would allow of a special appeal. (94)—Deposition of witness—Construction of—Special appeal—Survey map—Evidentiary value — Amin's report—No opinion expressed by Court — Assumption without evidence, if ground for special appeal.—The construction of the deposition of a witness, being only what the Court thinks is proved by it, and not being a question of law, is not a ground of special appeal. [F., 3 Ind. Cas. 173.] A survey map is not conclusive evidence of possession; it may be used as evidence of it, but its value depends on the circumstances under which it is made. No special appeal lies to the High Court on the ground that the lower Court has passed no opinion on the report of an Amin. An assumption made by a Court, there being no evidence on which it could be founded, amounts to an error of law and it is a ground for special appeal. HIMMAT ALI KHADIM v. NYAMUTOOLLAH KHADIM, 23 W.R. 250.

(95)—Evidence— Admission of defendant—Admissibility of whole—Effect of admission on co-defendants—Evidence Act, s. 83—Thakbust map—Presumption as to its accuracy—Misconstruction of evidence and faulty inference—Reversal of decision by High Court in special appeal.—Where an admission by a defendant is put in it must be taken as a whole and cannot bind the other co-defendants. Under s. 83 of the Evidence Act, a thakbust map must be presumed to be accurate. Where the first appellate Court misconstrued the evidence, acted contrary to the provisions of the Evidence Act and did not take into consideration an inquiry made by an Ameen, which was very much relied upon by the first Court, the High Court in special appeal reversed the decision of the first appellate Court. NIAMUTOOLLAH KHADIM v. HIMMUT ALI KHADIM, 22 W.R. 519.

(96)—Special appeal—Grounds for.—Where a lower appellate Court bases its judgment on the conclusion it comes to upon reading the contents of a document which involved the question of its construction and upon considering the facts of the case and the conduct of the parties: held, that no special appeal would lie to the High Court from such a judgment. BUNGSHEE DHUR MAHATA v. MADHOO SOODUN CHOWDHRY, 23 W.R. 406.

(97)—Special or second appeal—Grounds of appeal—Decision without sufficient evidence.—In a suit on a kabuliat, the Court of first instance found that the kabuliat had not been signed by the defendant, but by a third party, and that there was no evidence that such third party was authorized to sign it. The Judge on appeal reversed the decision. Held that the decision of the Judge holding the defendant responsible for the signature of a person of whose authority there was no evidence was erroneous in point of law, and was a ground of special appeal. SHAM CHAND BYSACK v. BUNGO CHUNDER CHATTERJEE, Marsh. 556 =2 Hay. 663.

(98)—Boundary line — Ameen's report and map — Report untrustworthy — Report found deficient— Special appeal. — Where an Ameen is deputed to mark out the boundary line between two estates, if the Judge of the lower appellate Court finds as a fact that the Ameen's report is unsatisfactory and his map wrong, the High Court cannot interfere with that finding in special appeal. If it finds the Ameen's report deficient in any point, it can send for the man and examine him ; but unless it sees reason to disbelieve his statements, or to differ from his conclusions as to where the boundary line runs, it must, in deciding the case, take those conclusions into its serious consideration, and if it rejects them, it ought to give reasons for differing in this particular from the first Court which accepted them. SHEO DYAL SINGH v. HODGKINSON, 24 W.R. 342.

(99)—No opinion on one of many points in evidence—Special appeal — Right of water— Presumption.—The omission to record an opinion on one of many items of evidence (e.g., an Ameen's report) is not such an error in law as to come within the scope of the provisions for special appeals. No presumptions of law in regard to rights of water are known in this country, but proof of ancient, reasonable user by particular recognised means is sufficient to give the right. SREEMUTHY BUNDHOO SOOKOOLANY v. MAHARAJA JOY PROKASH SINGH BAHADUR, W.R. 1864, 367.

(100)—Special appeal—Refusal to consider evidence — Payment of subsequent bill while earlier one unpaid—Error in law—Decision of first Court based on entry in day-book—Entry ignored by appellate Court—Error in law.—It is an error of law for a Judge to refuse to consider the evidence adduced by plaintiff in support of her demand, simply on the ground that it was improbable that the plaintiff would have received payment for one bill whilst an older one remained unpaid. It is an error of law and a subject for a special appeal for a lower appellate Court to ignore an entry in a day book on which the first Court decided the case. DARIMBOO DEBEE v. HURREEHUR MOOKERJEE, 18 W.R. 53.

(101)—Special appeal—Credibility of witnesses.—Where the first Court, for the reasons given by it, chose to disbelieve certain witnesses and the Court of appeal thought that two of those witnesses were credible, that is a matter with which the High Court has no power to interfere in special appeal. SREEKANT GHOSE v. BHUGWAN CHUNDER SEN, 24 W.R. 13.

(102)—Suit for possession— Presumption of fraud from party's non-attendance—Dismissal of suit for not proving fact in particular way— Error of law.—In a suit for possession brought by G, a purchaser at a Court-sale, an ex parte decree having been given, the defendants obtained an order for a new trial, alleging that the suit was really brought by R without G's knowledge. At the new trial, G, though summoned and also ordered to attend as party, failed to attend, and the case was thereupon permitted to be withdrawn under s. 97, Civ. Pro. Code. R then brought a fresh suit alleging that he got a conveyance from G of all his rights. G was made a defendant and he put in an answer supporting the plaintiff's allegation. He was again ordered to attend, and on his failing to do so, the case was dismissed as tainted with fraud. On appeal, the Judge also dismissed the suit, holding, that, until G should come forward and give evidence in plaintiff's favour, the plaintiff could have no right whatever. Held that, in dismissing the suit on the sole ground that the plaintiff had not proved the purchase, which he alleged, by producing his vendor as a witness, the Judge was wrong in point of law. RAM DHUN BANERJEE v. RAM NARAIN MOOKERJEE, 11 W.R. 311.

(103)—Special appeal—Error of law—Discrediting witnesses for general reasons.—To discredit witnesses merely for general reasons not affecting the particular credit of any individual deponent is to commit an error of law, which can be the subject of special appeal. (104)—Witness disbelieved by lower appellate Court, not sufficient ground for special appeal. —There is nothing in the law authorising the High Court to interfere in special appeal because the lower Court has happened to disbelieve a witness on the ground that the witness is an interested person, or when, upon any other ground within its own discretion, it does not attach much credit to the statement of that witness. DWARKANATH DOSS BISWAS v. MUDDUN MOHUN CHUCKERBUTTY, 6 W.R. 292.

(105)— Appeal — Judgment — Grounds for believing witnesses not given—Ground for special appeal.—The circumstance that the lower appellate Court had omitted to give in its judgment its reasons for having believed the witnesses whom the first Court had disbelieved, cannot by itself constitute a ground for special appeal. LUKHEE MONEE DOSSIA v. RAJKISHORE PAUL, 4 W.R. 106.

(106)—Appellate Court — Special Appeal— Reasons.—No general rule can be laid down as to when the reasons should be stated by an appellate Court for believing one set of witnesses rather than another; and the omission of a lower appellate Court to state such reasons is not a ground for special appeal. (109)—Examination of witnesses in Court of first instance—Transfer of Suits—Deposition read by another Judge—Irregularity—Waiver—Objection in special appeal—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 172, 173, 183—Wagering contract—Bona-fides—Mistake in estimate of evidence—Special appeal—Onus of proof.—The meaning of s. 183 of Act VIII of 1859 taken in connection with s. 172 is, that the judgment is to be given upon the examination of the witnesses by the Judge himself, and not upon a perusal of depositions, except those taken under s. 173 and the subsequent sections, which are expressly allowed to be read in evidence at the hearing. Whenever it is practicable, the witnesses should be examined before the Judge who is to pronounce the judgment; and care should be taken in the transfer of suits, and in the disposal generally of the business of the lower Courts, to prevent the necessity of resummoning witnesses; but where a deposition taken by another Judge is read, instead of the witnees being examined, it is only an irregularity which may be waived by the parties, and which would not be a ground for reversing the decree on the special appeal, unless it appeared that the appellant had been prejudiced by it. Per Tucker, J.—When a Judge of a Court of original jurisdiction, whose proceedings are regulated by the Civ. Pro. Code, dies, or is removed to another appointment, before the conclusion of a trial, or when a partially tried suit is removed from one Court to another, the evidence of the witnesses who have been examined by the Court which commenced the enquiry, must be taken de novo, unless the parties consent that the depositions already recorded shall be read at the hearing before the Judge or Court on whom it will devolve to pass judgment. [R., 8 A. 576 = A.W.N. 1886, 195; D., 14 B. 232.] Where in a suit upon a contract the defendant alleged that the contract was a wagering one and both parties had evidence and the onus was thrown upon the plaintiff of showing that the contract was not a time bargain and the Judge did not hold that the defendant was entitled to succeed without giving any evidence, unless the plaintiff disproved the allegation of want of bona fides, it was held that the onus was not thrown on the plaintiff in the proper sense and so as to be an error in law. It was for the Judge to estimate in the particular case the amount of evidence required, and the exact force of the presumption that the contract was a bona fide one, and if he has made a mistake in his estimate, it is not a ground for a special appeal. NARANBHAI VRIJBHUKANDAS v. NAROSHANKAR CHANDOSHANKAR, 4 B.H.C.A.C. 98.

(110)—Act VIII of 1869, s. 28—Promissory note insufficiently stamped—Erroneous procedure in lower Court.—The plea of the defendant in this suit that the document sued on by the plaintiff was insufficiently stamped, was overruled by both the lower Courts which decreed the plaintiff's claim. On special appeal by the defendant, the High Court was of opinion that the document was a promissory note and should bear a stamp of 12 annas and that the deficiency in stamps could not be supplied when the document was admitted in evidence. The appeal was, however, held to fail because the document had been admitted by the first Court and accepted by the lower Court as bearing a sufficient stamp, and the insufficiency of the stamp was the only ground charged in special appeal; and further, the error in the admission of the document did not in any way affect the decision on the merits. MAKBUL AHMED v. MUSSAMUT IFTIKHAR-UNNISSA BEGUM, 7 N.W.P. 124. [R., 3 A. 581, F.B.]

(111)—Act XVIII of 1869, s. 20—Stamp—Evasion to pay—Penalty—Discretion—Interference by High Court.—A Court may, under s. 20 of the General Stamp Act, refuse to allow a defect, as to stamp duty, to be remedied, unless it be proved affirmatively to its satisfaction that there was no intention to evade the payment of stamp duty. Where the District Court has found as a fact that a document was executed on an insufficient stamp for the purpose of evading the provision of the General Stamp Act, and so refused to allow the parties to pay the sum required to make up the full amount of stamp duty chargeable on the document, the High Court could not, in special appeal, question the correctness of that order. GAMBHIRMAL v. CHEJMAL, 10 B.H.C. 406. (3 B.H.C. 94, D.)

(112)—Special appeal—Objection as to admission of secondary evidence.—Whether secondary evidence is admissible in place of primary and better evidence, is always a question for the judicial determination of the Court which has to try the case on its merits, but although it cannot be, as a determination of fact, impeached in a Court of special appeal on the merits of the decision, still it must be based upon legal evidence, and therefore it is competent for the party complaining of the admission of secondary evidence to object on special appeal that the decision of the lower Court as to the admissibility was either given on no evidence at all or on evidence that was not legally sufficient to support it. special appeal.—All that it would be right for the Court to require for the protection of the revenue, in cases where a lost deed was shown not to have had a stamp, would be that the same money should be paid, before admitting secondary evidence, as would have to be paid if the deed itself were produced. But that is a question for the Court to deal with for the protection of the revenue. If the Court does not do that, but allows secondary evidence to be given of the contents of the deed, it is not an error which affects the merits of its decision, and which a person can take advantage of in special appeal. HARAN CHUNDER BHOORREE v. RUSSIK CHUNDER NEOGGEE, 20 W.R. 63.

(114)—Additional evidence on appeal, parties not entitled to put in as of right—Discretion of appellate Court.—The parties in an appeal are not entitled, as of right, to put in additional evidence. (115)—Additional evidence — Discretion of Appellate Court—Special appeal.—Although the lower appellate Court has the power to allow additional evidence to be taken under certain circumstances when the case is before it on appeal, a special appeal will not lie in the event of that Court, in the exercise of its discretion, refusing to allow such evidence to be taken. vested in them, they should as a general rule, refuse to grant such decrees where the plaintiff is entitled to sue for possession. Where, in a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's right to succeed to the guddee of a Mahant, the first Court passed a declaratory decree though the plaintiff was in a position to sue for possession, the Chief Court declined to interfere with the decree on an objection taken for the first time in second appeal, merely on the ground that the first Court in granting such decree erred in the exercise of the discretion conferred on it by law. A plea to the jurisdiction may be taken at any stage if the facts on which it rests are patent on the face of the record; but a party is not entitled to have new evidence taken when a case has reached the stage of a second appeal, merely on the suggestion that such evidence, if taken, might go to show that the suit was beyond the jurisdiction of the first Court. (120)—Special appeal—grounds.—A special appeal to the High Court can only be brought when the decision appealed against is contrary to some law or usage having the force of law, or there is a substantial error or defect in law in the procedure or investigation of the case. An error of fact cannot be any ground of special appeal. So, where, in a rent suit, the Judge erroneously stated that the rate admitted by the defendant was the old rate shown in a former decision when the rates were different, held, that no special appeal lay.
